

First Edition : 1987

Price: Rt. 200,00/US $ 40,00 Publisher :

Vagdevi Prakashan Sugan Niwas, Chandan Sagar, Biksner-114 001 (Indis)

Printed at :

Sankhla Printers,

Chandan Sagar, Bikaner-334 001

CONTENTS

APTER 1

neral Introduction

tradition of atiliastra, Significance of Sukrantitizea, Scope of

. Contents of Sukrantifere, Authorship; Date of compilation, nous editions of fut rantifities.

APTER 2

igin And Nature of State 22.24 e significance of the State . Origin of the State, Pactors of State, ganic theory of the State. The uphere of the State,

APTER 3

ture of The Government (Kingship)

spificance of the kine. Sanction for kine's authority. Classification the kings. The Psychological-philosophical classification, the politicoconomic classification . The king as servant, King as trustee, King od sovereignty. Mutual relations of the king and his subjects, Coercive thorsty of the king, Right to revolt against the king, Divinity of the ing.

WARTER 4

ractice of The Kingshiep

59 80 accession to the kingthip. Time of succession, Qualities desired in a ing. Education of a prince, Functions and duties of the Ling The ing as legislature. The king as executive, The king as judiciary, Pro-ocol of the royal court. Daily time-table of the king, Means of gover-Ance. MAPTER S he Council of Ministers

significance and necessity of the Council of Ministers; Qualifications of a minuter, Relationship between king and the Councillors, Contiution of the manuter. Working of the ministry, Functions of various ministers : parables, practicifite, practices, aachies, manieta, pradeirala, randita, sumantra, amtira, duta.

CHAPTER 6

General Administration Principles and Practice

P7.120

81-96

B-22

37.58

Philosophy of administration, Administrative departments, Categoritation of the employees. Dualifications and responsibilities of prominent Wiciale, Gell Dipari, are Editorit, publifyelishe, smithere, desirather

General Introduction

The Tredition of Nitisastres

etc. as their founder."

India has a long tradition of political speculations beginning right from the Vedas, Science of polity as an independent study was, although, not systematically persued in the period of Vedas and Sarras, a number of scattered passages throw considerable light, sometimes dun sometimes clear, on the theory and practice of government in the contemporary times I The seience of nolity as a specialised subject appears to develop about seventh or eighth century B C as we find a number of references to earlier political thinkers in Kautilya's Arthiastra and Afahabharata. These two works mention almost the same names indicating the existence and familiacity of some independent works on polity which were, however, not available to the later generations, it appears that, like other sciences, 'there were several schools among the students of the science of polity as well' claiming respectively Manu, Bribaspati, Utana (Sukra), Brabma, Siva or Indea

With the Shrippers of Mohabharata and the Arthatstra of Kauthya we find evidence of books written on the polity as a special study. Almost all the aspects of polity are ducused comprehensively in these two books. These books are joined by Smritts serviced to Manu. Yijlavskips. Narada and others. These books discuss all the aspects of Sociophicial and religious life with separate chapters on Rejudharma or Daydontid shoressing duties and functions of the king and the various officers, with so few ill and criminal law as well as inter-state relations etc. There is great controversy on the question of the date of compliation of these treatises but a general thesis ascribing the same to the period from 400 B. C. (20 OA. D. is remeable exceptive accordable. Arthatstra is now generally accepted as written by Kautilya of Chinks, a about the last quarter of fourth century B C, during reign of Chandragupta Maurya.

This Arthotastra-Smith tradulon in generally followed to

This Arthatstra-Smitt tradition is generally followed almost all the writers on polity of succeding ages, Anank of Nitigranhas were written during the period catedution fifth century A. D to the ascenteenth century A. E. Some of these books are well-known and deserts comprise some of these books are well-known and deserts comprise use study. The Nitistra of Kamsundaka, Nitistra-pilms of Somadevastor, Sukrantitistra, Bathagapata Arthatistra, the Purlma, (sepecially the Agel Purlma), Yukithalpatar of Bahay, Addishinterhackintament and Manazoldisa of Somadevastor, Sulventikalpataru of Lakshmidhara, Sulventikalpataru of Chandesta, Nitimackha of Chandesta, Nitimackha of Nijakanhis ad Somadevastor, Nitimackha of Nijakanhis ad Sifentificalaria of Nitimunica are some well-known deceitions on polity Some of these are independent political.

studies while some others like Abhitschitzerhich'nismin derote some chapters or a section for discussing the different aspects of the science of the polity Most of the above mentioned books do not show originality and are more or lets colourless summary of the earlier political thoughts but the treature like Kamanditive Ministra and Schrangifetra sit marked with some enternality and independent approach of many inper although broadly following the Arthattites It is no be enred that a number of terms the Flightims. Pliestoirs Dietmit deferties and Mittites bare bece the fity Harts ports, at the above to demore the surprise of pe'to it appears that F2 to time or Privatities were w trie a wit in apic or Freit, freestate pertant being get-I regard the experiment to the second great regions was used for Punton the men we erreit men antitete femeras a term to be negarity to the ferry Bhe deed toma at Kanties was a colle waterta sanaterm Thereen At tirracing es prope ar and an er of opening of the firmer and the e but # mer Egt er fift mit & bengeeferent becart the eterit for Connections and the and there confiden br war egift. I ifta bir me gramfin ift iberg faft if afgenie on various terms could be found in the various works on ancient Indian polity by modern scholars.5 The term ntil, however, is derived from the Samskrit root no meaning to lead, carry, bring, convey, take, conduct or to guide. direct or govern, Ny, therefore, means guidance, direction, right course, policy and gradually came to connote science of politics or ethics popularly known as Nitisastra. The books as the science of government or that of ethics or morality were known by Ningranthas.

Significance of Sukranitisara

Sukraniti, with the Nitisara of his predecessor Kamandaka, is considered as the most significant work on the science of government except the works ascribed to Kautilva. Bhishma (Raiadharmanarya of Santiparya) and Manu, It really works as a practical guide-book to the rular and is not limited only to the theoretical discussions It has been pointed out that it supplies some information on Hindu policy not to be found elsewhere, Sukra's views about classification of kings, gradation of various feudatories, minute details about the council of ministers, budgeting of the State's financial resources as well as the army administration give us ample evidence without which the concerned aspects of Hindu polity could not be made clear to the extent these are. The author of Sukrantti, broadly following the political tradition of the Hindus exhibits considerable freshness and originality of outlook upon some important political ideas.7 The work deserves a special study with critical appreciation in order to make the study of Hindu polity as comprehensive as possible. Scope of Niti

The author of Sukrantusara, unlike the others of his class. does not limit himself or his work only to one separated branch of life. The other fastras tend to deal only with one aspects of human life (and, therefore, their usefulness is restricted)-whereas the Nitisastra is useful to all and in all cases and is the means for the preservation of human society " He considers his mitifastra as root of the four-fold path of life (Dharma, Artha, Kama, and Moksha) and advises the ruler to peruse it in order to make himself victorio over enemies, affectionate and conciliatory towards his su jects and well-versed in the arts of statecraft.

Sukranti compares the needs of the knowledge of auditifor the stability of human affairs with that of food for tipreservance of physical body. The author, in a bid to stiblish the significance of mitigative by minimising the sameother Satrea, asserts that the other sciences like those arammer, logic, cituals, minimisa, vedenta etc are only intlifectual exercises (Budhhaushalam) of no avail to petus following their ordinary affairs whereas the mitigative cofollowing their ordinary affairs whereas the mitigative to grammer, logic, rituals, minulating, viduria etc. are only inliterual exercises (Budhikaushalam) of no wall to perior following their ordinary affairs whereas the ministra colduces to the desires and interests of all and hence is raysted and followed by all and, therefore, is viduspensable the prince since he is the lord of all men and things. In The king, therefore, is supposed to study and follow the ministriar the absence of which is always dangerous to a line which a versel which leaks. It has been said that the king in responsible for maintenance of Sundhemas among people.

terponuble for maintenance of Swedharms among people and this the could do only by adhering to his own dutit which are described in the mindstran. Sukes, therefore, astructual is singly whether he is duty installed or not, should roll his subjects according to nitiatstran. It is, thus, quite evident that the author of Sukranti does not timit the scope of nitiatistra only to the technical secure of pointy. The whole life is energied within its scope and the king is supposed to follow the same as he assessable not of pointy. The whole life is encureled within its scope and the king is supposed to follow the same as he is responsible not possible for the realization of four purusharibat by his subjects by ruling according to the discusse of milk burker, thus, defines militarira as a synthetic, comprehensive and specifically supposed to the proposed as a synthetic, comprehensive and specifically supposed to the proposed to nikis from other writers of his class who deal only with the echnical ecience of government. Sukra's view 18, therefore,

....

4 The Polite in Sakraeitelara

. .

craft but general natidatara applicable also to all people and thus 'Politica (or more properly the art of the government) in Sukra's system is not (as in Kamundaka) an independent branch of knowledge for instruction of kings in stateralfi, but is merged in a science of general morals', 15

Contents of Sukraniti

Contents of inkrantit, accordingly, are related to all the aspects of human life. Although politics forms the core on the contents, other socio-economic matters are also discussed and a full chapter is devoted to things other than politics.

The work is consisted of four chapters (the fourth one is divided in seven sections of prokaronas dealing with differen saspects of socio-political life) with an appendix or khilo chapter.

The first chapter primarily deals with the significance or initiative, the duties and functions of the kine, the varian the state, the grades of feudatories and kings and the building of capital with discussions on some auxiliary things. The second chapter mainly deals with the duties, functions an qualifications of the various members of the council or ministers and those of crown-prince and the administration crisis and working including the description of different kinds of officials and state documents etc. plus the behaviour of employees towards the king. A description service rules is a speciality of this chapter. The third chapt is a general one dealing mainly not with statecraft but with the nititistra in wider sense which is common to subjects a well as to the kings. The chapter is a practical guide social and interpressonal behaviour to be followed by all, sinteresting to note that some of the verges or their teach.

ings are well-known even today. The verre denying lending of book, money and woman to anybodys can be cited in example. The verses dealing giving up shyness in the matt of eating and enjoyment and declaring that wealth make friends when given out and enemies when not yearn? a popular even in the folk tradition. The fourth chapter divided in seven sub-sections dealing senantiely with friend which give the section of the sec

The first band of the control of the Autt. rather $33 44 Sec. 27 2 20 off one new a comp a per charter 50 digellifiege a. Codiaist en Brens a un aplimen Min fant AT KERTE BEG was be come + was deaved as an destrict all en the a demands organ come als go on me I well and ad I Sith By the matter of metter seet a 21 Procedure to Abil Bod treates and anyting a cone of no according ty Blesna to Kar in a nemicate mile en ur 127 Luitab which the go parasa parasa treedo un 3 a d. had train The Phinage over the base of the and and and and the dethe law and electron's pur he are defer three 2 at 40 an arthur of an every ber bengert a ent tothe a strike. telbe queres two orders are was go - gor Satistative as an authority was see there does a one weers a plante bid efeating licenstate, Daming, eath a decidance of her com, public Sales at the top in the lat of the fe "and the steen Alven ghoshs meations him with Briday steas a builde of shutter many and Kalatan atm advises to fallow Sakram the Subravillates also tends to appear the tradition of an authorship bring ascribed to Subra-harps. The proceptor of the answar. The Degraming versus state 12st Brahmil made a treature of morals containing ten milition y-darkand the same was abridged by other fosts and Vasiotha and Subra each separately for the benefit of the Falors and other mortally. This abridged complation, containing only 200 looks, is an extence of all the aspects of polity ductions by Manus and others and in said to be apoken by Bhitgava Sukra). Modern scholars, however, do not tend to support this view. The present sukraniti has borrowed freely from mahabharta, Manu and even Kamandaka and does not appear to be written before these treatises. The mention of Brahma or some other God as the originator of nticastra is a wellgrounded theory adopted by almost all the authors of Hindu tradition. It is always mentioned that Brahma or some other God propounded a science and a rishi prepared a treatise on his basis to be followed by others for their benefit. The things and customs described in the sukranttisara tend to point out some known period of history and not support the view that | had been written in the beginning of the world. It is also not possible that a treatise containing ten million slokas was successfully abridged in the 2200 slokes only. There has been a tradition among ancient Hindu authors of remaining anonymous and ascribing the authorship to the gods or rishis. The author of sukrants appears to be a believer in this tradition. It has also been suggested that some author named Sukra prepared this treatise at some later date.34 This, however, does not appear to be true as Sukra. claimant of the authorship, is called by all the epithets used for original Sukracarya and asserts that he has prepared un abridged edition of the original attitative spoken by Brahma himself. This, therefore, is more likely to be true that the teal author chose to remain unknown and to ascribe the work to Sukracarya in order to make it more credible.

Date of Compliation The question of the date of compilation of sukrantiisara has been one of the most controversial problems of the history of Sanskin literature. It has been placed by different scholars m different periods widely ranging from the prechristian era to the nineteenth century down. It is remarkable that no other author on nitifastra has ever referred to this fukrantil. hence nothing could certainly be claimed in this regard. G. Oppert, the first editor of the treatise, has placed it in the period belonging to the "amplif" and the early epic literature.23 Dr. V. S. Agrawala ascribes il to the period of the Imperial Guptas on the basis of some similarity of administrative machinery of the Guptas and the same as described in the fourteenth one. But by the fourteenth century the muslims had extended their sway almost over the whole country and were not inhabitating the north-western region only. This makes us conclude that the author of fukrantis belongs to twelfth or thirteenth century and the mention of gun-powder should be a later addition.

This conclusion is also supported by some more facts. Sukrants supplies the information that the price of gold was sixteen times that of silver and the same has been stated by Bhaskaracarya of the twelfth century. 12 It has also been pointed out that Sukra's enunciation of the principle that the treasury should have a reserve equal to twenty years revenue was obviously followed by Hindu kings in the aforesaid centuries as proved by the accounts of booty received by muslim invaders. $2 hioreover, the emphasis more on cavalry than elephantry35 also indicates a period when horses were proving more helpful in the battle-fields; and this reminds of the period of Turkish invasion. The author of tukrontil must have learnt a lesson from the military causes of turkish success in India. To the above, as Dr. Ghoshal argues, 'we may add the striking fact that Sukra's work, though nossessing more intrinsic ment than Kamandaka's nitisara, is not quoted by any of the authors of the great medieval Digests on rajedharma and rajanss, while the later by contrast is quoted by nilakantha in his attimatakha On the other hand it is unthinkable that the author with his usually independent outlook on political ideas lived in the same age as the authors of the Samrus digests belonging in the fourteenth and the following centuries with these stereotyped political nations and conceptions. 97 Similarly, had the auther of fukrantit belonged to early nineteenth century, he would certainly have mentioned the Europeans who, by that time, were known all over India and had established their strong basis in East, West and Daccan by subjugating Bengal. Hydrabad, Mysore and the Marathas, Taking all these considerations in view one tends to support Dr. Ghoshal's thesis that 'the Jukrantiisara is comparatively late work which must be assigned (notwithstanding evident interpolations) to a period not later than the thirteenth century?

th's opinion, therefore, does not hold good that work of quite late date fubracity us of go value what evidence for early Indian usage of philosophysis ercy much uses and additions of Mates & 10 the Case with a number of the Hindia graft. but it is not destrable to ignore it altogether in the study to political philosophy and practices of the Hindu period, by all means, reflects the general spirit of the same a eathance of interpolations is evident by the fact that author of fukronia declares to bave abridged the original Hiding in 2200 slokas whereas the available fukramii. lowing for variations of different manuscripts, contains nowing for variations of unfercal manuscripin, community to the community of the community

Various Editions of Sukranitisar

A number of editions of tukennitished have some into light in last hundred years The first modern edition was edited by O Oppers and published by the then Government of Madras in 1822 A D It is followed by editions of Jivannida Nadies in 1854 A. M. is nothwest by summer of the state o Series edition published in 1961 A D. An English (randation by Broug Aumai Sarkar based on Opper edition was also der sacred Books of the Hindus Scries in 1914 he edition by Oppett speaks of the manuscripts it is based whereas the other ones are silent source The Venkateshwate Press edition (with dation by Achaiya Mihirathandraji with 10mi es of Jisananda Vidyasagara is followed by D a monumental works while the same authorities ŧ E entrings at other birees as the Augusterpas outains 118 verses less than that of Opp Kathi Santhril Scries edition by only at study follows the Kashi edition which er near to the first edition and its I n

General References

9. Sukrantti., 1 6. 10. Sukrantti . 1.7-12. 11. Sukrantii . 1 15, 26-27 12. Sukrantti (tr. B. K. Sarkar) . p. 2 13 Ghoshal, U N , The Struggle for Empire, p. 271.

14 Sukrantti, 3 226. 15 Sukranttt, 3, 194-95.

17. Santiparva, 56 29-30, 59 85

1. Altekar, A S., State and Government in Auctent India. v S. 2 Altekar, A. S. State and Government in Ancient India, p. 8. 3. Ghoshal, U. N. A History of Indian Political Ideas , Part 4 p. 296-

303. 4 Kane, # V., History of Dharamafastras, Vol I.

5 Altekar, A S, State and Government in Ancient India . p 1-4. 6 Apts, V S., The Student's Sanskrit-English Dictionary p 300-1. 7. Ghosal, U N , in The Struggle of Empire . p 270

8 Sukrantti . 1.4-5

16 Ghossi, U. N., The Cultural Heritage of India Vol. II w 464.

18 Kane, P. V , History of Dharmafastras, Vol. I, p 36 10 Ant 17 0 00 0, -10, 0 - 1 . - 1 6 -

- 40 Majumadara, R. C., The Struggle for Empire, p. 285
- 41. A History of Indian Political Ideas, P 517. 44. Ine Struggle for Empire, D 284.

 45. English translation of B. K. Sarkar is generally followed in the Cases of the difference of opinions, which are less and of so spin 42. The Struggle for Empire, p 284.
 - feence at the concerned of opinion, which are less and of no sain the control of ted and the majority view among the three is accepted

Origin and Nature of the State ments about the king being 'another form of Vishnu', or about the functional resemblance between the king and the gods, are only analogical and metaphorical, we cannot do away his very definite and exact statement that the king is made out of the particles of eight gods.²² In the end of the passage dealing with godly attributes of the king this, however, is also suggested that 'as the Moon does not shine well if deprived of one of its parts, so the king does not flourish unless he has all the parts described above'.²⁴

It should however, be emphasized that here the king is equivalent to the State only as the sovereign authority and not as the king-in-person who could be a part of the demons if his deeds are unrighteous. It implies that Sukra makes a distinction between the king as a personified system of the State sovereignty-which is always divine-and the king as a Government who could over-ride the nits and be a part of demons. This aspect of Sukra's polity needs an elaborate discussion which is proposed at a later stage while studying the concept of the divinity of the kings.

But it should be borne in mind that the deliberations on the theories of the origin of the State are of no practical consequences nowadays. The modern social scientists have generally accepted the theory of historical evolution of the State Hence any interest in the theories of the origin of the State is basically of an academic nature. It has been rightly remarked, "Theories of origin are always speculative They are ex post facto justifications of political reality, While from the scholastic and academic point of view, their detailled discussion may be important for the study of the institution of kingship. It is not the theories of origin which are propounded that are important, but the powers, attributes and functions which they seek to justify or to attack. It is of no importance historically to know whether actual anarchy preceded the establishment of kingship, but the matsyanyaya or the fish analogy is of value as demonstrating that accoring to all schools of Hindu thought, the main duty of the sovereien was to afford protection in the widest sense, and to enable the people to live in a settled society. Equally it is of no importance form our point of twee to know which the particles of devau were given to the king, but the theory is of importance as indicating the attributes which a king should possess. Thus the controversus regarding origin, have significance only in explaining the theory of social obedience and should be viewed only from that point of view. And Sakra's deliberations in this regard undoubtedly imply that while the State like devas is widely responsible for the welfare of its subjects, the latter are expected to have total obedience and deep severence for the soverein authority in the manner one has for the golds.

Factors of State

The State has been defined by moderan political philosophers as 'a terrifornal society divided that Government and subjects claiming, within its allotted physical area, a supremacy over all other institutions $\foatsilon$ Four essentials of the State are implied in this definition They are (1) a definite physical territory (2) subjects or population (3) a Government (4) and soveriginty. But according to the political thinkers of ancient India, main constituents of the State are seven. Kausilya names these: (1) swdmi (the ruler or king) (2) amatya (ministers), (3) jongad or starts (territory inciding population, (4) durga (fort), (3) kosha (treasure), (6) danda (army) and (7) mitro (ally or freed) $\foatsilon$ Almost all the political thinkers in Hindu India accepted this sapsings theory with some minor modifications. Manu and other smiftlis also follow the same course.

Sukranii also names the seven constituents of the State. They are Sovereigo, the Minuster, the French, the Tresure, the Country, the Fort and the Army.²⁴ The sapianga idea has been compared with the modern concept of the Stateconstitution it has been said that the sovereign and the minister a spatial Covernment exercising sovereign pc - I bunty Forts and army are al and external sovereignty, al for a ntenance of the sestal on of welfare of allers is thing but.

Or f the State 29

to be born again. A larger in heart mod Sizes that is profit as subsourced and our pills at the him fill interest are not only for a lith that is that the sizes of a new of the guaranteed for a larger terminal rate profit had not of private as secured by will a larger than the body to larger the confidence of the larger than the body to larger the confidence of the confidence of the larger than the larger than

Cyclen # Theory of the State

Chearte, Ike Kaufilya and Mana, describes the State at te of eigenism stating that the seven constituents of the State are its seven furths #1 The organic theory of the State warnes the different constituents of the State with different t whi of a heing organism and the State is taken as a perma ; the purpose of the whole constitution to to east'e the retion of the State to express and realize its will, which is adject from the individual wills of all redividuals, and 2 'tent from the sum of them "? Sukra also describes diffeest constituents of the State as different limbs of a living Naming the constituents he not only says in exploit that the State or kingdom is an organism of seven "it but goes on to draw a parallell of these seven constithe lements of the Lingdom the king or sovereign is the the minister is the eye, the friend is the ear, the the is the mouth, the army is the mind, the fort is the and area or country is the legs 20 Another analogy for a zbat of the om'

d d' asible. But these c only understa

only understa
should b

ali hos to a subes of a ms or are not clest should not be integral funcd. It has been t be the analo-

rs are

be the

tion of its organic unity based upon the principles of integration and differentiation, than was achieved by the older thinkers $5 Sukraniti, therefore, emphasizes the unity and integral functioning of the State-organism and though describing the king as head on the roots, lays equal emphasis on the welfare of the seven limbs as well as the people " Just us the branches etc of a tree wither up when its roots decay, so also without the king, the commanders and company (grow powerless) immediately or in the course of time $7

But this organic theory extends the sphere of the Stateactivity because 'the central idea of the theory, as Leacock suggests, is to get aside the contrast between the individual and the State by amalgamating them into one

The Sphere of the State

The sphere or the jurisdiction of the State-activity has always been a subject of controversy in political philosophy. State and society are two different institutions, this implies that there must be some limit to State-activity. Among the Greeks and ancient and medieval west 'idea of the State embraced the entire life of man in the community, in religion and law, morals, art, culture and science "40 In the nineteenth century the idea of a Government governing least became popular but the present trend favours increase in Stateactivity . the modern State is a social service State, a positive State..... it properly intervenes to uphold social standards. to prevent exploitation and manifest injustice, to remove the needless bazerds of the economic struggle and in assure and advance the general interest against the carelessness or selfishness of particular groups,41 Yet the regular increase in the State-jurisdiction increases tendency of totalizarianism. It, therefore, become educative to know what a pragmatic Philosopher like Sukra has to say in this regard.

Sukra does not discuss this question in theoretical terms vet some conclusions could be drawn by studying what he expects from the State and the king and what, in his views. makes the State come into existence. It has been suggested 'as nitifastra is considered to be the spring of dharma (virtue), artha (wealth), kama (enjoyment) and moksha (sal-

as has been argued. 'A large number of small States existed in the Indian sub-continent, and our political thinkers felt that the existence of none could be guaranteed for a longer time unless a proper balance of power was secured by wise alliences. Population as a separate factor should be taken as incorporated in country or territory as it was too evident a truth to be specifically mentioned". 50

Organic Theory of the State

Sukrantti, like Kautilya and Manu, describes the State as living organism stating that the seven constituents of the State are its seven limbs, at The organic theory of the State compares the different constituents of the State with different limbs of a living organism and the State is taken as a person ' the purpose of the whole constitution is to enable the person of the State to express and realize its will, which is different from the individual wills of all individuals, and different from the sum of them. 43 Sukra also describes different constituents of the State as different limbs of a living person. Naming the constituents he not only says in explicit terms that the State or kingdom = an organism of seven limbs but goes on to draw a parallell of these seven constituent elements of the kingdom the king or sovereign is the head, the minister is the eye, the friend is the ear, the treasure m the mouth, the army is the mind, the fort is the arms and area or country is the legs 32 Another analogy for the organic integrity of the State offered in tukrantti is that of a tree whose root is the king , the king is the root of the State, the Councillors are the trunks, the Commanders are the branches, the troops are the leaves and flowers, the subjects are the fruits, and the lands are seeds. Analogies of army with mind and legs with country and fort with arms of lands with seeds and troops with flowers etc. are not clear and comp " these comparisons should not be ""standing of the integral func-

obs

ould be appreciated. It has been ever fanciful might be the analor in the above extracts between the well as the арргестаand lost goods, disclosure of State secrets, and discussion about the king's dements. So also you must never even in mind commit the following actions forsaking swadharma, untruth, adultry, perjury, forgery, secret acceptance of gifts, realisation of more than the fixed revenue, thieving, violence and enterprise against the master You should never commit violence on anybody in the matter of remuneration, duties or revenues by increasing them through sleight or strength All measurements have been definitely fixed and ascertained by the king. All the subjects should try to be qualified in the performance of meritorious actions. When a violence has been committed the agressor must be caught and handed-over (to the State) Those who have let out bulls and other animals must keep them within proper control I will surely destroy by severe punishment those offenders who after hearing these my decrees would act contrary to them. They should always inform the subjects of these laws by the State-drum and also place them in esplanades as written notices 46 A close analysis of the above list reveals that the jurisdiction of the State-activity was much greater than that of primary duties i e. protection of the people and punishment to the eriminals. Economic life appears to come under indirect control of the State as sales and purchases of a number of things without seeking prior permission from the State are held unlawful Not only sambling and drinking but hunting in also restricted perhaps in order to preserve the forests Making of wines and medical practice have to be licensed Similarly, in social and then in family and inter-personal relationships, tukraniti advises the State to intervene; new social regulations are not valid unless approved by the State; lower castes, in order to maintain social amity, are not to be defamed; and anybody trying to create disturbances in family life and inter-personal relations m considered an offender speaking harsh words even to a slave or servant, what to say of wife and children, amounts to disobeying the king. It has justly been commented, "Here is a mention of all those practices and professions which for public safety, social peace and future interests of the parties concerned should Nations, the suler abould ever catefully present it if The 100 primary Judictions of the larguage potention of professional providence of professional providence of the design and those two cannot be adverted without primitation. The larguage is also called observation besides being ruler and protession. The King is advised to issue divices over a number off subjects for the people in follow and the offenders are to be severely prinhed.

The following laws are to be always promulgated by the king among his subjects towards the states and sersants, towards the wife and children or towards the disciple no one obeying my command should be harsh and cruel in words. l'alschoods must not be practised by anyone with regard to the system and standard of weights and measurements, currency, extracts, some kinds of metals, glice, honey, mik, fut, oil, ground substances and other things. Nor must writings be forged, bribes be accepted, or the interest of the master consciously damaged. You should never keep screened t. c. give protection to men of wicked activities, thieves, bad characters, malicious and offensive persons as well as other wrong-doers insult and tokes should never be dealt out towards the parents and other respectable seniors, Mi well as towards the men of learning and virtuous character Discord must never be created between husband and wife, master and servant, brother and brother, preceptor and pupil as well as between father and son.45 You must never obstruct the tanks, wells, parks, boundaries or place of bindrances to the use of religious houses, temples and roads. nor must you check (the movement of) poor, the blind and the deformed

Without the permission of the king the following things are not to be done by the subjects—gambling, drinking, husting, use of arms, sales and purchases of cow, elephants, horses, camels, buffelees, men, immovable property, silver, gold, jewels, indixecans and poises, distillation of wines, the drawing up of deeds is, gift, or loan, and medical practice Nor if the following things; serious "mulgation" mulgation of new social 1.

32 T

General References

- Sănilparya 67, 16-17.
- 2. Arthalästra 1.4
- 3 Sukrantii 1,24
- 4. Sukrantu 1 24. 5. Sukrantii 1 🔝
- 6 Santiparva 56, 3-4
 - 7 Mudrarakshasa, Act I 8 Arthatastra XV Chap. 1
 - 9. Sukranjil 1 4.
- 10. Sukrantii 1.5
- 11. Sarkar, B K , The cultural Heritage of India Vol. Il p 514.
- 12. Arthutastra 1 4. also Mahabharata XII 59 78 9
- 13. Altekat, A. S., State and Government in Ancient India p. 29. 14 Dighunikara Vol. III, p 846
- 15, Auere) a Brahman 1 14, also Taltereya Brahman 2.7.2
- 16. Beniprasad, The theory of Government in Ancient India p 15.
- 17 Arthaigstra I, 13
- 18. Santiparva 59 5-12
 - 19. Manu VII, 3-4 20 Sukrantu (tr. by B K Sarkar) 1.141-152
 - 21 Sukranger (tr. by B K Sarkar) 1 187. 22. Sukrantii (tr. by B K. Surkar) 2,426-27
 - 23 Verma, V. E. Studies in Hindu Political Thought and Its Metiphysical Foundations, p. 262
 - 24 Sukrantii 1.76.
- 25. Sukrantii 1.86.
- 20 Panikkar, K M , The Ideas of Sovereignty and State in Ancier
- India, p 36 27. Laski, H. J., A Grammer of Politics, p. 21
- 28 Arthoffstra 6 1.
- 29. Sukranjii 1 fit and 4,1257-58.
- 30 Altekar, A. S., State and Government in Ancient India, p. 44. 31. Altekar, A S., State and Government in Ancient India, n 44
 - 32. Sukranfil 1 61.
- 33. Beauprasad, The Theory of the State p 223 34. Sukrantii 1 62.
- 35. Sukrantti 4, 1257-38.
- 36. Ghoshal, U N . A History of Indian Political Ideas, p. 506. 37. Sukranett, 4, 1246.
 - 38 Sukrantil, 4, 1256
 - 39. Appadoras, A., The Substance of Politics, p. 84.

be endorsed by the State, and receive a royal patent, charter a license in testify to their bonafide character. In all these cases the State, according to fukrantil, must interfere even on principle of 'individualistic minimum.' However highly philosophers and theorists might praise the principles of letalone and non-intervention in social affairs, statesmen and pillars of States have uniformally adopted in practice the principles of socialistic interference, and been compelled to enlarge the functions of their States even against their own abstract conceptions The hoary Sukracharya and the modern Sidgwick are here on common ground 47 This, however, seems remarkable that in that much a long list, nothing has been said about theological, spiritual and intellectual and nesthetic affairs Does this mean that the author of tukramit is not in favour of curtailing individual liberty outside the sphere of socio-economic activity ? This cannot be called an error because the list is so comprehensive that so little a question as of letting bulls and other animals out is also considered Freedom to worship and intellectual and aesthetic persuits is noteworthy as the ancient and medieval states in west - and the present totalitarian ones also-do not guarantee these liberties. The ideas about State's sphere in sukranili are more or less in accordance with arthatastra which also advocates State-intervention in socio-economic affairs. 4 It could be suggested that State in Hindu political philosophy, and in sukraniti also, is the chief promoter of four-fold path of life and thus extends over almost all the spheres of life But this does not mean that it could intervene in any affair ike its Christian and Islamic counterparts.

2

Nature of the Government (Kingship)

- 40 Appadoras, A., The Substance of politics, p 95 Il Appadoral, A , The Substance of Politics, # 104. 42 Sukrangit, 1.5
- 43 Sukrontil, 1 4.
- 44 Sukranett, 1 20

 - tions are disturbed Hence the greatest political offender and the most criminal sinner is he who by his conduct promotes the breach between those who should normally live in amity and peace And Sukrantil provides against such offence by the socio-political decrees issued by the king " Sukranter (Tr. H K. Sarkar) p 40

- 45. "The bond of livil society is torn asunder when the moral rela-

46 Sukrantii, 1 292-312 47. Sukrantel, (tr by B K Sarkar) p 40-1 48 Sinha, B. D. Readings in Kautilya's Arthafastra p. 2

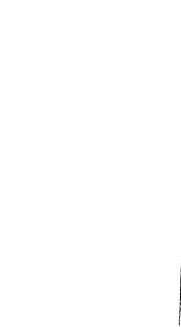

Nature of the Government (Kingship)

The authors of the articlastra and the montabharata, although their preference for monarchy is as doubtless ms um, have discussed some aspects of non-monarchical forms of Government as well. But it is strange that tukerniti does not even take cognizance of any of the non-monarchical or republic governments and the only form of government discussed here is kingships. Someone may offer an argument that as non-monarchical forms of government bad ceased to exist and monarchy was the only form that could survive by the time tukernit was compiled, the subtor of the tukernit, hours a pragmatic thinker, saw no use in descussing a thing which had lost even its existence.

Significance of the King

This is but natural that the king is ranked first among the different limbs of the body politic in monarchy, Sukranti, falling in hie with Kausilya, Manu and others, has practically equated the king with the whole State, though theoretically he is one of the seven limbs of the state-structure, Sukrantit, like others, equates him with head in a body, I and thus offers him the most important place in the political structure of the society. He is the ruler, protection and briefactor of the people's and has been compared to the heliustant without whom the boat sinks in a cas, I the is 'second self of Vishini' on the earth and is upholder of dilumna' and cause of pronnerity of the world.

Sukraniti, differentiating between astronomical and manbased bistorical cycles and describing king as the cause of historical division of Time, remarks, "Time is divided into several periods, epochs or ages according, in the first place, (to the atmospheric conditions, e.g., mosture and temperature to rains. cold and heat and (to the astronomical conture) to rains. cold and heat and (to the astronomical con-

political thinkers Kautilya, Bhishma, Manu and others support this view. Sukra also favours the same idea when he, like Manu, tells that the king is made out of the permanent elements of Indra, Vayu, Yama, Sun, Fire, Varuna, Moon and Kuvera, and is the lord of both the immovable and movable worlds 14 He further describes how the various administrative functions of the king are derived from various regents of quarters. Like Indra, the sovereign is able to protect the wealth and possessions As Vayu or Air is the apreader (and diffuser) of scents, so the prince is the generator (and cause) of good and evil actions. As the Sun is the dispeller of darkness (and the creator of light) so the king in the founder of religion and destroyer of irreligion. As Yama is the god who punishes (human beings after death) so also the monarch is the punisher of offences (in this world). Like Aggs, the prince is the purifier and the enjoyer of all gifts. As Varuna, the god of water, sustains everything by supplying moisture so also the king maintains everybody by his wealth. As the Moon pleases human beings by its rays, so also the king satisfies everybody by his virtues and activities As the god of wealth protects the jewels of the universe, so the king protects the treasure and possessions of the State As the Moon does not shine well if deprived of one of its parts, so the king does not flourish unless he has all the norts described above 15

This makes it very clear that not only all the functions or obligations of the king but the authority and power to execute these are derived from gods and this is the highest sanction behind king's office as dyine authority could not be challenged or disobeyed fo an other extract the same type of sanction derived from drume origin is suggested. The ruler has been made by Brahmil, a servant of the people, getting his revenue as his remuneration's Ph. scoplain; that the bass of king's authority is his being the creation of Brahmil, Sukra with Nariada, offers an original explanation for the moral sanction behind king's authority. It appears that Sukra was a staunch behiver in the theory of karma and re-burth. Only the past actions, secording to this theory, are real determinants for this birth. This naturally should ditions, c. g) to the movements, shape and nature of the planets; and in the second place to the deeds and activities of men, whether beneficial of hurtful, and great or small. The king is the cause of the setting on foot the customs, usages and movements and hence is the cause or maker of time (1 e. the creator of epochs) If the age or time were the cause (of usages and activities) there could be no virtue in the actors."? And, therefore, the lapse from virsue is neither the fault of the Age nor of the subjects but of the king 4 The idea of king as the maker of the Age has been emphasized time and again by Hindu political philosophers. Manu, in an exaggerated estimate of the quantum of the king's influence upon the time-spirit (Zeit-geist') tells that the keita, the freth the dnapara and the kale ages reflect the behaviour of the king " Naradio and Gautamall support the same view. Mahabharata says with emphasis that it is the king who should undoubtedly be regarded as the maker of the Agecycle. The krita, treta, duapar and kalipuga are all matters of the king In fact, it is the king who is spoken of as Juga 12 Sukra here follows the mahabharata-amirtil stadium. Besides being a god on earth and maker of the Age the kind has been compared to the benefactor member of the family. The king is always expected to prove himself a father to his subjects Sukra makes advances on this theory and comparison mot only with father but the mother, preceptor (gurb brother and friend as well (and also with Kuvera and Yama in the same extract)? This means that Sukra recognizes king's ingrificance not only as a god, or age-maker but as a member of the family.

Sanction for King's Authority

The question of the sanctusy of king's authority has always been a buraing question of political philosophy. What make a lang exercise his authority over others? Why is he to be obeyed? Should he be reverted only because he is mighted among weaker people or has he got some moral sanction for his office and authority?

The divine origin of the kingship has always been taken as a moral and religious sanction for king's authority by Hindu

The theological classification

The kings, under the first classification, are categorized in two types. The prince, who is virtuous, is a part of the gods. He who is otherwise is a part of the demons, an enemy of dharma and oppressor of the subjects,20 The idea is further elaborated, "The king who is restrained, valorous and skilled in the use of arms and weapons, who is the queller of foes and not independent of nitt, who is a man of parts (gunds) and has acquired the arts and sciences, who in not an associate of the lower people, who has long views, who respects old men and attends to atti, and who is respected by meritorious men si known to be a part of the gods. The king who is otherwise in a part of the demons and gets hell.$1 The author of jukronisi supplies some examples of the kings like Varirayana and Nahusha and Prethu and Vena who were rewarded or punished in life and even after death according to their virtues or vices,23

Though the kings have been many times termed as virtuous or singer by Bhishma, Manu and others but Sukra, for the first time draws this clear-cut distinction and dares to go to the extent of calling an unrighteous king a part of demons,

The psychological-philosophical classification The second classification of the kines is based on the psychological and philosophical tendencies but leads to the same goal. No political thinker other than Sukra has ventured to draw a parallel between the actions of the Lings and the three component paris - gunds - of the physical reality (the prakril) as envisaged by samkhya system of philosophy. Sankhya calls the praketi tripunatmaka - composed of three gunds which are named as sativa, salas and tames. Broadly, the first stands for purity and refinement; the second in for action and the thud, tamar, signifies what is stoled and offers resistance. It is believed that not only prakett but everything that emerges from II II also similarly constituted, for the doctrine maintains that effects are essentially identical with their material cause.23 The origin of the concept of three gunas has been ascribed to psychological tendencies since the kinds of feeling tone are made the basis of the distinction 24

erran it et il a perion aces realt ne bin by gegal americo est come of the thegester weeth a fitter in the part aufine int a greet unt eth f' !' m egible theory faleretif declares at a King faithe rater provention and beneficion of the people and a quitte his ettength by preance, And he is the fied of the earth be anie of Lie derde in the present beth as well as of persece" If The has been supported by a gemeral cation. It is sure that everything happen under the influence of pest tarms (post-actions). Hence advect suggesting comm is an and emission is micless to

This explanation is remarkable because it not only makes the kingship a right but a responsibility as well. The auster-

ties of & s pressous and this birth make him the king and he is supposed to be austere in this life also so that he can perform his kingly duties righteously. This appears as if doe to the austernies of his previous birth he bas been sputtually as well as materially promoted. The material promotion makes him a king while the spiritual promotion demands greater austerities so that he could advance more on the path of spirituality by following califhorms of ritigates This explanation makes it clear that according to the author of the lukrariti the king's authority is derived from his origin which is something different from that of Manu and Bhishma who follow the theory of the divine origin. According to Sukra, king's authority is a reward for his past and present austerities and good deeds and his divinity is also a by-product of this process. Here, Sukra's theory of social order-the theory of karma allowing a scope for human freedom-and his theory of king's authority are in total agreement.19

accruing out of it accordingly to decide the rank and category of the princes. That ruler is called a samanta in whose kingdom without oppressing the subjects, an annual revenue from one lakh upto three lacs krasas is regularly realized

That ruler is called a mandalika whose annual revenue exceeds three lakh krasas upto ten lakh. The raja in he whose income exceeds 10 lacs krasas upto the twenty lacs. The maharaia is he whose income reaches to the fifty lacs. The twarat in he whose income exceeds the last unto one crore. The same at is he whose income goes a crore to test crores; virat, whose income goes beyond that to the fifty crores and the Sarrabhauma is above that and to whom the earth with its seven islands is ever bound 26 Sukra, thus, classifies the princes in eight categories on the basis of revenue.

He fixes also the standard revenue from a village. It wone thousand krasas per year.29 It, accordingly, explains the territorial status of the different categories of the princes. The prince who rules over 100 to 300 villages is admonta and whose authority extends upto 1000 gramus is to be called mandalika. One qualifies to be called a raia if he earns revenue from upto 2000 villages and mahārājā upto 5000 villages. The swarts is lord of 5000 to 10,000 villages and one would be called same at if one sules over 10,000 to one lac villages. The prince whose authority extends upto 10 lacs gramas is entitled to be called virat and the whole earth is ever bound to the sareabhauma It is to be noted that a grama III a piece of land whose area is a cros whose yield is 1.000 silver krasa. This calculation is verified by Sukra himself when he save that a samanta is governor of 100 gramas and the swares enjoys the revenue of 10,000 villages. 90

Sukra also categorizes the governors below the rank of a samant but they are servants appointed by the king and hence should not be called princes. The differentiation is clear when he asserts that the employees who collects the tevenue equal to a samant are to be called anusamant or undersamanta. The man who is appointed by a king over 100 villages, a territory equal to that of a samonia, is called a nel-sămanta.91

Sukrantti, remarkably, categorizes the kings according to the guna prominently manifested in their personality and drede and in these deeds are reflected the gunas through which the prakett as a person of the king manifested. Three linds of kings, therefore, are mentioned, "there are three kinds of penance, sattvika rajasika and tamasika. The king has his character according to the penance he often performs " The idea has been further elaborated in accordance with the political manifestation of the gunds, 'The king who is contint to his own duty and is the protector of his subjects, who perform, all the sacrifices and conquers his enemies and abo is charitable forbearing and valorous has no attachment to the things of enjoyment and m dispassionate, is called samila and attains salvation at death

The king who has the opposite characteristics is itimata and gers hell at death. The miserable king who is not compassionate and is mid through passions who is ensious and untruthful who has vanity cupidity and attachment for enpryable things, who practices deceit and villainy who is not the same or uniform in thought sprech and action who is fond of pickies #? quarrets and associates himself with lower people, who n independent of and does not obey sett and who is of all intriguing its position is called at it and gits the condition of limer animals or imminable thoughts after death te P has also been suggested that the agreeta belongs tog di, I'd effer had omen and the similar of demons at These extra, to support the wew dis used in the present of ent mithe angen en Caben en net ber fem anter ber meitel pr + 's gra and environments, it to eather a apir la gireates come saliera amet stablest at antibecome, 1 . 1 4. 1 . 10/8 240 24

"I' H 107 " " # 1 FT . there extra harren

The King as Trustee

It, therefore, seems logical that sukrantti, like mahabharata,34 appears to support the view that preference should be given to the interests of the people by the king, Sukra boldly declares that the State and its treasure are in no way to be considered as personal property of the king; the collection of treasure as for the maintenance of the army and the subiects and for the performance of sacrifices. This leads kings to happiness in this life and hereafter, otherwise to misery. The collection that is made for wife and children as well as for self-enjoyment leads to hell and does not give happiness thereafter. 17 This clearly implies that the king should act as a trustee, Sukrantil, therefore, rightly advises the king to act according to the nitifastra the absence of which is siways dangerous like a vessel which leaks, $ Sukra, being a realist. does not bother much about the rituals of the kingship and declares that, from the very moment a man attains the posttion of a king through skill, might or valour, no matter whether he is properly anothted and duly installed or not, he should begin to rule his subjects according to ntil, being always above board and ever holder of sceptre. 80 It is, therefore, in accordance with the nature of trusteeship that the king is advised to spend money according to the manner indicated in jukranities with the warning that the fulers who do not follow niss are unfortunate and go to hell either through misery or through cumdity.41

King and Sovereignty

Sovereignty has been defined and discussed in a varied manner by different political philosophers and it has not been possible to reach any absolute definition. But almost all the definitions - including the liberal ones - tend to indicate that it is the supreme authority in the territory of the State.42 It is an essential element of the State without which the latter loses its right to rule and make the people obey its orders. Almost all the types of States - varying from the most autocratic to the most liberal ones-possess this without which they cease to exist as a State, Although sukrantti does not discuss the sovereignty as a separate ele-

Sukraniti, however, asserts that the revenue should not earned by unrighteous means. He makes one more classific tion of the kings on the basis of the righteousness of t revenue collection in three categories according to which t best' (trestha) king is he who, by following the practice the weaver of garlands, protects his subjects, makes t enemies tributaries and increases the treasure by their nealt The middling (madhyama) is he who does this by following the practice of vailya and the worst (adhama) by service and receipts from fines, holy places and lands consecrated gods 23 This classification reminds one of the classification done on the basis of three gunds of samkhya system and on can dare to conclude that the gunas are reflected even in th system of revenue collection. A number of nitikaras hav emphasized on the righteousness of the revenue but no one except Sukra attempts this distinct classification.

The King as Servant The concept of king as public servant has been highly appreciated by the Hindu political thinkers right from the author of baudhayan dhatmasutra. Taxation has been regarded at the salary of the king for the duties he performs, Sukra, following this tradition, asserts that the king should serif his subjects as a slave against the wages he is raid by them " This is strange that supporting the divine origin of the king. ship Sukra, with Bhishma and Manu, calls the king a maile! as well as a servant of the people. He declares that the suler has been made by Brahma a cervant of the people getting his revenue as remuneration "The king thus acquires lordinip as his sovereignty is meant for protection of the people as well as seronude of the people who are his payeth It has been tightly observed that the author of fakrantil applying Manu's and Blitchma's doctrine of the creation of the king, concerns the king to be the servant as well at matter of the preste by divine ord cation. On the one band. we are full that the hing is divinely charged with the servet of the per gir sa cetaen for taxatam, and on the other hand. we trad that be m day ely entrusted with nutbority over them

assibility of any conflict arising between ey and us political counterpart, Naturally, ion would prove more powerful as he nught and resources of the State But the , the symbol of the 'desires and interests of me is resolved by Sukra when he boldly e political sovereign could be descrited or he people if the tormer be an enemy of virtue, treneth.61 This implies that the political soveobey the dictates of legal sovereign in whom and microsis of all people' - the will of the rganized. It may be concluded from this analy-'anti' appears to support the views that the ultireigniv resides in the people This idea has been pular sovereignty' by modern writers. The suppor-"s idea argue that sovereignty had originally belonte people and they could not lose it by prescription " 'fact, never had alienated it to a monarch. **

and the formulated will of the people, if possible, , be without any legal validity if it is not expressed Jeh constitutional channels. Hence, it may be argued idea of 'popular sovereignty' punishing the 'political reign' is not valid. But we are not to forget that what a has written is supposed to serve the purpose of a stitutional law for the State that follows it And the only istic remedy in a monarchy could be nothing but to rt or dethrone the ruler who, ignoring all good advices, t according to the nititatira. It, therefore, appears onable to draw that sovereignty in Jukrantil is a concept The legal governighty - nitilaxira - is an of popular sovereignty and the king-politi--is supposed to follow the 'desires and interests ctly following the first. The popular sovereignty the political one if the latter acts otherwise. must be admitted that they (Hindu political not give us 'any systematic exposition of the of resistance, indicating clearly the limits beyond could not go and defining the circumstances

ly idea of 'popular sovereignty' 15, however, very rient of the State but this should not riean that some ideat about it could not be drawn. Sourceomly as a separate element has not been discussed at length e en in the whole Hindu political literature as II was to the Hindus a composite concept. And the fact that the State had essentially an administrating character sended to lessen the theoretical petentions of Hindu sourcegais.⁴⁹

Sukruntit tends to favour simultaneously different ideas of sovereignty and one may get confused without a keen analyse. Being a divine creation king should naturally be sested with absolute assertingty and fakrantit declares. The prince is the cause of time and of the good and end practices. By a terrible use of this engine of sovereignty he should maintain he subjects each in his sphere "I The long has been called he root of the State-tree." Dunda and within as decembed is attributes of the kings and he is advised and to confer his additional completely even upon his own son while he innest in living. "I has clearly implies that sovereignty vests ully in the king.

lut the king, although recognized as a sovereign, is supposed act strictly according to the dictates of neutastra to supply imself as well as the subjects with trivarga or virtue, wealth nd enjoyments, otherwise he destroys both 48 This 15 markable that jukranin, like some modern thinkers, asserts at law or nitilastra 'conduces to the desires and interests 'all and hence in respected and followed by all it in also dispensable to the prince since he is the lord of all men and ings '49 The term 'desires and interests of all' (sarrabhishkarom) is to be compared with a modern thinker's idea ten he says that sovereignty 'is the will of the nation orgased in the State,'se It appears that while the nolitical sovegnty de facto and de jure both lie, according to Sukra, m king, the legal sovereignty is vested in the nitisastra of gramafastra This view is further supported by the fact at king is nowhere mentioned as a law-maker and in ways expected to follow the dictates of nitifastra This disction, therefore, may be made that while the legal sovegnty is imagined to be an attribute of the attifastra, the ig is the real political sovereign.

So far the king is concerned. Sukra advises him to act the lord as well as the servant of the people of The king is advised to protect the interests of the subjects; otherwise he would be a samer who would lose his sovereignty receiving the fruits of begging, slavery and poverty and could even be ruined and killed by the good of

Coercive authority of the king

Sukrantti asks a remarkable question: Can anybody he called a hero who punishes his own subjects? It appears that the author here is not in favour of the punishment to the subjects and yet it is again and again asserted by the same author that it is the fear of punishment meted out by the king that each man follows his own duty and the king should, therefore, make the subjects perform their dharma by the use of his terrible sceptre, a Sukra, perhaps, tends to establish the theory that it is the unfighteous behaviour of the king which is actually responsible for the unrighteousness of the subjects. It is said that the people always follow the behaviour of their king who suffers or enjoys the results of the former as they are his subjects 44 Being himself dutiful the king should appoint the subjects to their own duties as they always approach a king who is religious and authoritative 43 Sukra opines that no good could accrue to a king through punishment of his own subjects as that leads to the destruction of his fame, wealth and virtue, He further states that satyayuga had no danda as the king then possessed dharma in its entirety, in the trees punishment existed in full as the subjects had vice to quarter of its amount: in dwarara danda to the extent of three quarter of its amount was practised as virtue existed only to half its extent; in Kali punishment to half its extent in designble as the subjects are poor and miserable through the wickedness of the king as And here Sukra boldly declares that the king is the maker of the Age as the promulgator of duties and sins; the fault are to be ascribed neither to the age nor to the subjects but to the king. 67 It is evident that fukronts makes the king responsible for the origin of danda.

It is remarkable that Sukra follows. Manu and Bhishma m declaring the king the maker of the Age to derive the origin that alone would justify the resistance on the part of the people. It is not unlikely that this may be partly due to an apprehension that an open and frank discussion of the topic may lead to the encouragement of anarchy.⁴³

Mutual relations of the king and his subjects Discussing the mutual relations of the king and his subjects some verses of kamandaka have been repeated in sukraniti showing the necessity of the king to fulfil the needs of the people 64 He m the cause of the prosperity of his subjects and is compared poetically with Moon and a helmsman. He is a source of pleasure to the eyes of people as the Moon to the sea. He is a perfect guide without whom the subjects will get into trouble as a boat without helmsman sinks in a sea, sa By comparing the king performing various duties to the different members of the family, sukranite asserts an emotional and family relationship between the king and his subjects. Like a father he endows his subjects with good qualities; the mother pardons offences and pourtshes the children, so also does the king A king should, like a preceptor, be a good adviser to his subjects and teach them good lessons. A king should receive his own share of the people's wealth and produce as a brother takes out his own legal share from the ancestral property. As a friend is the confident and keeper (or protector) of one's self, wife, wealth and secrets so also is the king, to It has been emphatically stated that the subjects without the king do not keep to their own duties, but in the same breath the importance of the subjects has also been emphasized by stating that the sovereign also does not flourish in the world without the subjects . Even a wellqualified king could sometimes, according to Sukra, remail without the subjects, but subjects, however, vicious, could not be without a king Just as Indrans is never a widow, so also the subjects #

The subjects, therefore, are advised to respect the king as if he were a 'second self of Vishnus's They must not involve in my activity that, to anyway, goes against the desires and interests of the king and should always make efforts to please the king  It could be argued that the prople's right to derbrone a ling in to be exercised only if rough a pepular set of! Evene it is an estate constitutional one, and that it is not feasible to remove a king who has still lit power of the State writer him. But, as has been explained people's right to rebell and mive a more virtuous suler to the three was a mach more feasible and practicable right in turns when governments unble the modern ones, were not arread with tank a long and trained atomic bombs and the long did not have a long and trained regular army. In a monarchy based on a ferding and strength of the king no constitutional remedy could be feasible. It is not of a leaser significance that the people are advised not to tolerate the oppression lying down.

Divinity of the king

There is fittle doubt that this roll appears to support the theory of the chira. Cryin of the larg. Like Manu and others, the author of the hard nevers that the larg is created out of the parts of the reght display. But it is noted that this creation is a result of the autitity and prinners of the lang himself is He is said to be a prounted by Brabial to serve the projet. If Attributes of Yama and Kustra - punishment and wealth sespectively are particularly emphasized in an other estates. If the King is supposed to be a 'second self of Vishou's Some scholars detect here some influence of the doctions of the increasion of God.

A comparison of Sukra's, theme of exemblinee between the king and the gods and the Egyptian view reparting the same could be made. The king is supposed to be worship plot like gods is worship king men-maos-ra in your breast. The kings is the God as (knowledge, taste satiety) who dwells in hearts, whose eyes see into every breast. He is the God ra whose rays made us see, who gives light to the two Lands, more than the sum's disc (aten). The king is the kaz his mouth is abundance: his being is created he is the God khnum who fishnoss all flesh, the begetter who begts all men. He is the Goddess bear who defends the two lands. Whoever worships him is protected by his band. (But) he is also the Goddess sekhment the lone-coddess who devours the of danda primarily from the ruler's sins. This is accompanied by his theory of the proportionate decrease of darda matching man's increasing turn with the ruler's sinn—an eviden adaptation of the singuit principle of the adjustment of a man's duties in proportion to his diminishing capacities physical as well as other onca **

Right to revolt against the king

This is remarkable that some Hindu political philosophers have supported the people's right to revolt against a suffer king Muhabharan goes to the extent of declaring that the king who follows the advice of a vicious minister becomes a destroyer of righteousness and deserves to be killed with all his family by his subjects, indeed he very soon meets with destruction  Subjects are authorized to tyrannicide, if no other remedy is left to them?*

Sukrantti does recognize the people's right to resist the king's sins and to revolt One is advised not to wish for wealth, fame, life and residence at a place where, among other undesirable things, the king is indiscreet 74 king's essence is his virtuousness losing which he fortests the right to rulehis sovereignty being a reward for his virtues; otherwise, both the king and the people are rusped. It is, therefore, advised that if the king is addicted to immoral ways, people should territy him by taking the help of virtuous and powerful even if they are enemies ?2 This m termed m 'passive resistance' of the people against the evil ruler by some modern writers. 78 Although sukrantt does not expressly call for tyrannicide, it, however, asserts that one should not live for a day where the king is antagonistic and advises the people 'to desert the king as the ruiner of the State if he be an enemy of virtue, morality and strength' and in his place, for the maintenance of the State, the priest is authorized to install someone qualified as the king from the family of the ex-king with the approval of the people 74 This is evidently based on the principle that virtue and good policy are the essential qualifications of the king, failing which he forfeits his title to the obedience of his subsects 75

No Hindu political thinker meluding Sukra, except a solitary example of Narada, supports the aforesaid view that a wicked and monstrously vicious king is to be taken as a punishment of people's sins and, therefore, should always be tolerated. Sukra, like Bhishma and others, recognizes the people's right to revolt against a victous king. Even the hereditary right to kingship is not always indefeasible. Kingship is a reward for the good deeds, austerities and penances of the past and present and someone could achieve it without any hereditary right with the only condition that he should follow the miniastra . from the very moment a man strains the position of a king through skill, might or valour, no matter whether he is properly appointed and duly installed or not, he should begin to rule his subjects according to mit, being always above board and ever holder of the sceptre, $7 The king is considered a part of Gods only if he m virtuous; otherwise he is a part of the demons, an enemy of dharma and oppressor of the subjects It, therefore, becomes clear that a king, only by being a sovereign, is not to be consted with gods, Sukra, no doubt, expressely declares that a king is made out of the parts of the gods, but in the same breath he does not forget to warn that he loses his divinity as soon as he acts viciously. It appears that Sukra actually favours the idea of the divinity of the kingship as an institution but he is by no means a supporter of the idea of the absolute divinity of the king-inperson. The office of the kine and the person of the king are to be separated and only then we could resolve the apparent contradiction of the views expressed in fulcantti regarding the divinity of the king.

enemies of ra to him who transgresses his commands. The Egyptian view advocates to worship the king but Sukra does not make any statement like this and only sees a resemblance between the attributes of the king and those of the gods. The king is nowhere supposed to be worshipped. But it could not be denied that the king, according to Sukra, is made out of the particles of eight gods.

made out of the particles of eight gods.

But the divine origin does not automatically make the king another god or a representative of the god on earth whose order—righteous or unrighteous alike—is to be always regarded as a divine desire. Shearnti does make a distinction between a virtuous and a sinful king and the latter is called a part of the demons—if the king loses the godly attributes by his vileful actions be ceases to be a part of Gods.8 Sukra also asserts that a king failing in his duty of the protection of the people is to be destroyed and sent to hell by the gods. A king not following the virtuous path is called tamat and he goes to the hell after his death; he is supposed in belong to parts of the demons.*

Sukraniti, moreover, advises the subjects to desert an unrighteous king; he could even be dethroned and the priest with popular approval, as has been discussed in the preceding section, could install someone qualified from his family in the office of the kingship This, therefore, becomes a question of debate if Sukra really favours the idea of the divinity of the king.

Defining and explaining the divine right of the kings four conditions have been proposed. (1) that the monarchy is 4 divinely ordanced institution; (2) that the herditary right is indefeasible, (3) that kings are accountable to God alone; (4) and that non-resistance and passive obedence are enjoined by God in An explanation of these principles may be sought in the famous address of James 1 of England to his parliament: A king can never be monstrously visious. Even if a king is weeked, il means God has sent him as a pountament for people sint and it is unlawful to shake off the burden which God has Juid upon them B:

amendment of their lives are the o God to relieve them of that heavy

54 The Polity in Sukramitisara

11. Sukraniii, 4. VII 429 42 Garner: Political Science and Government, p 166-7 1] Panikksr, K. M. The Ideas of Sovereignty and State in Indian

Political Thought, p 67 44. Sukrantti, 1 60

45 Sukrantti, 5,11.2 46. Sukrantif, 1.25-6 and 1 95 also,

47 Sukrangtt, 518

48. Sukrantti, 1,67. 49 Sukrantti, 1.12.

50 Duguit quoted in Political Science & Government, # 147.

51. Sukrantit, 2. 275-76. 52 Garner; Political Science and Government, # 157

53, Altekar, A. S. State and Government in Auctent India, p. 101. 54, Ghoshal, U. N. The Struggle for Empire, # 272

55. Sukrangil, 1.64-65

16 Sukrangi, 1,178-80 17 Sukrantti, 1.66.

58. Sukrantti, 1 93-4 59. Eukrantti. 2.214.

60 Sukrantil, 2,231-37 61. Sukrantti, 4.2 130

62. Sukrantif. 1.120 63. Sukrantil, 1.50. 64 Sakrantii, 4,3-8

65 Sukrantil 4.3-8. 66 Sukrantil, 4 1,55-7.

67. Sukrantit, 4 1.58. 68. Gheshal U. N. A Bistory of Indian Political Ideas, p. 304

69. Santiaerra 92 9 70 Mahabharata, 1386.33-6 71 Sukraepi, 3 47.

72 Sukranțti, 4 1.113-14. 73. Ghoshal, U. N; A History of Indian Political Ideas, p. 505. 74. Sukrangri, 2.275.76.

75 Ghoshat, U. N. A History of Indian Political Ideas, p. 505 76. Satrantil, 1.71-78

17. Satrangel, 1,185. 78. Satranti, 1 50 79 Sakrantti, 2.214.

10 Verma, V. F. Studies in Hindu Political Thought and Its Meta-Physical Foundations, p. 261 11. Moret quoted to the same, p 260.

$2. Sakronal, 1 70. $3. Sutranger, 1 120. 14. Sutramit. 1.32, 35.

$5 Figgie: The Divine Rights of the Kongs, p. 5-6 85. Appadorsi, A: Substance of Politica, p. 31.

IV. Salrange, 1.26-7

General References

```
1 Satransii, 1 61-2
   2. Saltarfit, 1 20
   3 Salvanes, 164-63
   4 Sulgantit # 214
   S. Subrangel, 41 58.
   6 Subrantil 1 61-66
   7 Sukrartet, 1 21 2
   8. Sukrantit, 4 1 59
  9 Manu IX. 301-2 quoted by Ghoshal in A History of Indian Pol cal Ideas, p 164
 10 Narada XVIII. 26-33
 II Gautama VIII. 1.11
 12 Santirarra 69 79-98
 13 Sukrantii, 1 77-30
 14 Sukrantti, 171.
 13 Sukranitt, 1 73-78
 16. Sukranger, 1 188
 17. Sukransii, 1 20
 IR Sukrantil, I 20
 19 Chosal, UN , A History of Indian Political Ideas, p 501
20 Sukrantti, 1 70
21 Sukranert, 1 84-5
22 Sukrantil, 1 67-8
23. Hirayana M., The Cultural Hernage of India, Vol III, p 42
24 Indian Philosophy, Vol II, p 263
25 Sukrantil, I 29
26 Sukrantit, 1 30-4.
27 Sukrontil, 1 35.
28 Sukrantil, 1 83-7
```

29 Sukranzii, 1 193 30 Sukranzii, 1 191-2

38, Sukrantii, 1 15 39 Sukrantii, 1 26-7 40 Sukrantii, 4 VII 422.

er minuten é

.

Practice of the Kingship

4

Practice of the Kingship

Practice of the Kingship

Succession to the Kingship

Sukra, like other Hindu thinkers, has a preference for the fpeethat (fielder) in the line of succession to the kingdom. If there are more than one make members in the king's a family, the eldest son deserves to be the king and the others are to be his assistants and auxiliaries—but he would not be eligible to be a king if he, however, is deaf, leprous, domb, blind or enunch ¹ Manu and others also suggest that the eldest son loses his eligibility if he is blind or mad. ² Mehabharata also supports this view — Dheptshire, because of his blinders, had to withdraw in favour of his younger brother Plandu.

Sukranti, in the case of the ineligibility of the eldest ion of the king, offers a line of candidate for succession. The eldest son, losing the ground, the next to him, i. e., the eldest son obtains successively — becomes eligible to the throne. Next comes the eldest son's son or the son of his brother. It has been asserted that in the absence of seniors the juniors are hirs to the throne. Sukrantii mentions no woman relative of a king as a candidate This clearly shows that he is not in favour of woman kings. Biblishma appears more liberal as he allows the daughters of the kings who have died without male fasice to be appointed as kings 4

This problem has again been discussed while pondering over the candidatuse for crown - prince's office. The ruler is advised to select the eldest offspring of the legally married wife who can perform the tasks of the State without idleness. He may select as crown-prince has uncle younger than himself or younger brother, or so on of his elder brother, his own so no rose treated as son or an adopted child or daughter's on or sister's how moconstructive accounts it for failure. A clue examination of both the estracts reveals printed of takantin for the theory of senantify as well as of family lineage yet the claim of personal ment is also to be relieve and with as the condition that the king should be capable to perform the tasks of the State without allenes is also minimized even in the first instance. Both and personal mental two conditions of the cross-person of the continuous of the cross-person of the continuous of the cross-person of the continuous of the cross-person of the cross-person of succession and proposes some remedies to resolve the same It emphatically warns against the partition of kingdom among rival clarmants as it would produce no good and the kingdom so disided is exposed to the enemies. Unity among the heirs is appreciated while differences among them are held dangerous to both the State and the family. Sukrantii, therefore, advises the king to satisfy the different heirs by arranging the same kind of comforts and enjoyments as for himself and by providing status and high positions with umbrellas and thrones for them, they are to be made governors of provinces or to receive one fourth of the royal revenue or they may be appointed according to their status and abilities as heads of different State-departments like cows, elephants, horses, camels, treasure, army or kitchen etc. but the king himself must supervise and seal all in succession." It appears that 'something like a feudal system is thus to be introduced by establishing a hierarchy of officials from among the members of the royal blood'se to avoid the rift's and disunity among the different claimants belonging to the royal family. The king is advised to look after the well-being and interests even of the children of royal family, what to say of major ones, who are likely to be tempted by their interests and to destroy the ruler if they are not well-guarded. Royal children are compared with infuriated elephants without drivers 11 And the only way 10 make them feel contented is providing royal comforts and high positions for them. But Sukra simultaneously advises the king to extirnate the relatives and kinsfolk of evil dispositions through tigers or enemies or through crafts, any deviation from this course would result in the disaster of both the people and the ruler.12 A son of the king, even if he is vicious, is never to he forsaken as he, if oppressed, destroys his father by having resort to enemies 18

Sukrantti, thus discusses the problems of succession in detail and not only supplies a list of successive heirs but anticipates the coming difficulties in the way of an heir and proposes practical remedies to overcome the same with a view to maintain the unity of the royal family in far as possible by making the king a guardian of their interests, It has been rightly argued that the author of sukranize had all the disadvantages of hereduary monarchy in his mind, hence elaborate rules have been suggested about the treatment of and dealings with men belonging to the royal household which the king should make it a point to study punctilinusly,14

Time of auccession

Sukrantti, being a practical treatise on the State-craft, pays attention to minute details Even after deciding the successor. Sukra warns the kipg against giving away the kingdom to him-however deserving he might be-while the latter is alive , while one is living, full sovereignty should never be conferred upon the son, though he is naturally of a good character, for that is the source of great mischief The example of Vishnu is cited in favour of the shove statement who did not confer sovereignty upon his own son Sukra says that the most right moment to grant sovereignty to the son is towards the end of the life.16 It has been earlier stated that the State should always have only one leader and the king should never try to leave any situation without leader 16 It appears that Sukra is suspicious even of the son who may deceive his own father after getting the kingdom as more than one leader of a kingdom are not considered as desirable: the king, therefore, is advised to confer sovereignty upon his successor-even his own son-only at the end of his life.

Qualities Desired in a King

Sukrantel, like other treatises on the State-craft, has elaborately discussed the qualities a king should possess. It in His control and the strength of the Albert School of Control of the strength of the strength of the strength of the School of Control of the strength of the School of the S

Substantion about a come and quality and all of the City I'm Manpp and to fort water gard afferent and the defermi I We cut of whe is parts be to made be ab. . 'd ger' em th' different dates by backer of the professed with all become ment of the people the Benteriot of bod byres me founder of Durma and deste, yes of secke up, the gualde of offeres the public and the envire of all gitt, and the protector of the terancer and protection of the State His is expected to maintain everytedy and to be a source of pleasure to all to He should prove himself simultaneoully & father, mother, preceptor beother and fered to be tabert and like Kuters and Yama be agrees of wealth and a punisher these seven qualities should never desert the king It lie should possess the attribute of mercy, give w? his own faults and abandon unfriendly words and should always satisfy his subjects by gifts, bestowel of honours and good deals. The king should possess restrain, valour, and skill in arms and meapons, be a queller of foes and not independent of riel, he should possess good qualities and acquire the different arts and sciences and associate not with lower classes, have far-ughtedness and respect for old men. Such a king m supposed to be a part of gods. 20

It has been said that a wise king should notice his own faults as well as those of the subjects—and employ himself first and then the servants. This clearly implies that a good king should, by his behaviour, serve as a model for his subjects

A number of defects and vices a king should refrain from are also mentioned by the author of Interantif The shadrarga defects i.e sensuousness, anger, ignorance, cupulity, vanity and passion should be abandoned by the king. Even one of these is said to be a perfect cause of the ruin. Sukra produces the examples of the kings who got ruined by not giving up these defects ; king Dandakya by taking to sensuousness, Janamejaya through anger, Aila through cupidity, Batanı through folly, Paulastya through vanity and king Dombhodbhava through passion while Jamadagnya and Ambarisa ruled over the world for a long time by giving up these six enemies. 21 Similarly the king is advised not to indulge in hunting, dice-playing and drinking as these caused dangers for Pandu, Natshadha and Vrisonis respectively.53

A king falls in danger of being described by his people in case he is uncharstable, susults men, practises deceit, uses hersh words and punishes unduly. People do not like a king who is very cowardly, procrastinating, very passionate and excessively attached to the pleasures through ignorance,25

The kings who are unable to increase their strength and paid no tribute from the princes and by whom subjects are not well-protected are compared with the oxen by the author of Sukrantii 26 The king when the subjects look upon with terror and disrespect, and who is descried by both tich and the virtuous men is called nepadhuma. The king is advised not to get attached much to actors, musicians, prostitutes, athletes, and lower castes. He should not be inimical to the intelligent and pleased with cheats and must understand his own faults. The society gets disturbed and disorganised if the king does not pardon offences but is a great punisher, is the sobber of men's wealth and oppresses the subjects on hearing of his own faults. Sukra advises the king In appoint spics to know his subjects' opinion about his deeds. He should remove his own faults and be not angry with the subjects who criticize his wrong behaviour.35

This is obvious that fukrantti lays equal emphasis on the public morality as well as on the individual morality of the king. He supports his views by producing burning examples from the lines of kings, rsis, asuras and deras. It has been rightly pointed out that fukrantil lays special emphasis on the king's own discipline and self-restraint. The greatest of his functions is considered to be ruling himself. Acceler remarkable point is appointment of spies not only is key watch over officials and the people but also against the key himself and on behalf of the subjects. If The ling, early, has been said to be an upholder of aharma and desnoyed irreligion and all his qualities mentioned above are necessary in perform this dury.

But special emphasis is put on kindness, beneficiared, swith words, charity as there is no art of subjugation in the tree words, charity as there is no art of subjugation in the tree worlds as these. Similarly, prosests, strength, infell great and valour are great qualifications without which a kaj though weating, cannot enjoy even a small region, but though weating, cannot enjoy even a small region, but the soon income now a seem his kingdom A king who posters' there qualifies is beld superior to a king with great with the Burga pregnants thinker the author of takengin partially displays his privily for the practical side of king's attributes.

Education of a Prince

Great arguilla once has been attached to the rightrout class tion and proper training of the pronect by Atoma points thomats in ouncer to make them capable of printing the Official raish of the State without intensity, self-initialization and ignorance. Austria, Bilbriana, Manu, Anamadika and others have produced an elaborate discussion over long education in those respective treaties. Such as hold of easier interial modern and also state year. But it is not care to with those of Raishou and Manu for the production and the state year. But it should not be the order of the care to the state of the

Solita prioris will the important mod the proper od cath of the first of prostage that insociation with the groups will be first the district of the district the district and calculated the district for the provide the district of the provide the provided the district of the provided the provi

ide and the drive a treated blent approximate for a critical control of the province of the province of the province and the

and dandanits. The author further defines the same. The science of discussion and Vedanta are founded on the science of Anviksiki, virtue and vice, as well as interests and injuries of man are based on the trays, wealth and its opposite on rarta and good and had government on dandaniti and thus rightly asserted that all the castes of men and the stages of human life are built upon these sciences 31 No wonder that a king, therefore, is advised to take proper lessons in all these four branches Trays is constituted of the six angas. the four vedas, mimāmsā, (system of philosophy), Nyaya (system of philosophy), dharmafastra as well as the puranas. Varia treats interest, agriculture, commerce and preservation of cattle. And Danda is restrain and punishment, hence the king to known to be Danda and the Note that regulates punishment in Dandantti as it governs and guides. The king Il expected to give up both pleasure and pain through Anyksiki and the science of self and gets both temporal and spiritual self-realisation through the Travi ."

In an other extract where the king is advised to look after the royal children carefully the author of Sukraniti again discusses the education of the princes : He (the king) should make the children of his family well-up in the nintagen. proficient in archery, capable of undergoing strains and of bearing barsh words and punishments, habituated to the feats of arms, master of all arts and sciences, upright in morals as well as well-disciplined through his ministers and councillors, as Yet the first priority is for the knowledge of lastras as II is the root of all self-discipline which is the thief thing to the leader or the king, this makes one master of the senses and he who has mastered the senses, acquires the fastra This acquisition of discipline and, therefore, of fastras should be provided not only to the king but to the sons. In ministers, to servants and even to the subjects.34 Applying a poetic nimile the author of fukrantit opines that without proper training of the senses they are like an elephant which is running to and fro in a destructive erepast which is running to and it on a destructive manner in the vast jungle of pleasure-acekingness and isserts that the man who fails to subdue one's senses cannot master the world extending to the sea. The importance of Fropre training is again emphasized when Sakra 1975 the the dynasty shou comes to suit if its children according to the means of several in Batters The subcrustified the means of selecturing a problem thild when he state that he should because the child when taking to evil 2975 by prisons who are of evil habits, as one should bind a widel and wild elephant.

Subtractif recognizes the contribution of the environment and the methods of bringing-up of a child when he spright that toyal children should be brought up with good click cloihed in good dreat, respected with good seats, and sour-side with good food and thus they are made worldy of boat crown-princes. This means that the author agmilies the role of good and deteen living that are endowing the stimulation, a sense of dignity and other characteristic this ore desired in a person who has to tule over others.

Thus it is evident that faukra has envisaged a complete course of instruction for children of royal household. The education is to be at once physical, intellectual, motal, military as well as politicals.

Functions and Duties of the King Survey of the Survey of the Survey of the Survey Survey of the Survey of Survey of feet the wifeet the wifeet the wifeet the wifeet the wifeet the wifeet to a same in iceard to the fulfilment of hit beligations towards his subjects and the charmon, betwo primary functions of the king, according to Sukra, the offenders in another and constant punishment of the offenders in another and constant punishment of the taked, charity, protection is punishment of the taked, charity, protection is subjects, performance of the subjects, performance of pastya and other sacrifices, equitable realization of venues, conversion of princes indo unbustry chiefs, quellg of the enemies and extraction of wealth from land to The king, being the source of all the departments of the government, is ascribed duties regarding almost all the departments. All his functions could be discussed under three heads ie the legislative functions, the executive functions and the judicial functions as the king, being head of a monarchical State, is really the whole government

The King as Legislature

The King, although always considered an 'upholder of dharma' (the unchanging law) by the Hindu philosophers, is never vested with the authority of making laws In this sense fukrantti also does not ascribe the role of the law-maker to the king. But, simultaneously, it would be an understatement if we assert that the king is given no legislative functions at all Law as such, according to Hundu theorists is not made by man but is culled from the scriptures called dharmafastras and the king is always adviced to act according to the same-only then he could be called an 'upholder of dharma'. The king, however, is called the cause of the setting on foot of the customs, usages and movements and hence is the cause of maker or time '41 In a similar extract he is again regarded as the maker of his see and of the good and evil practices,43 Describing the resemblance of king's functions with those of the gods jukrantii states that he is generator of evil and good actions and is the founder of religion and destroyer of irreligion The king, thus is made responsible for moulding society, correcting usages, interpreting tradition and for purging the abuses of social life in accordance with the dharma. He, undoubtedly could not be a legislature in the modern meaning of the term, but 'as secular law of the Hindus is not only based on the ample but also an actras or usages, the king has the right of modifying, amending or even abrocasing these weages and customs if he considered them to be against the spirit of the are '40 It is also to be noted that Dharmalattras are many in number and sometimes may have conflicting ideas over a problem. The king, in such case, was held responsible to decide the correct one and is advised of employing his own intellects with other things: the wise king by daily acquiring the various branches of learning, practices only those works which are known to be virtuous according to Srut, Surh, tradition and self-deliberation.  The 'self-deliberation (manasa) clearly implies that the king was expected to set his own discretion—though mecessarily according to the spirit of the datama.

Subranti advices the king to give high publicity to the last by aounding the State drums and put them in written form in explanades so that these could be recognized as State-commands. It is also stated that royal assent is estential to make new occal rules. These Issuangatras should be dily signed by the king 44 Laws thus become promitigation of the State and the king become the sanction of the laws; and since the ruler is the dictator of virtues and viere, people make it a point to practise that by which he is satisfied 44.

Sometimes Judiciary also, though indirectly, attends to the function of legislating by interpreting the laws in the light of the changing spirit of time and by ettablishing their interpretation as precedent which is as good as law in judicial system. The king, according to Sukra, is the bigself court of law in the land and thur his interpretation sequire the status of law. It is said that the king is at therety to proceed at its best in cases which are impossible to decide finally and which are of a doubtful character.

This discussion should imply that the king, although explicitly not authorized to make laws, could indirectly attend to legislative functions, in the times of need, according to the Spirit of the diagrantiations.

The King as Executive

Protection - paripalamam - of the prople is one of the two primary functions of the king. Seen out of the eight functions of the king. Seen out of the eight function mentioned in an other extract quoted above are essentially of executive nature. Amoust all the duties, except those of judicial nature, assigned to the king in the lakenoit make him the real executive bead. Protection or paripalamam, the supreme duty of the king, is a wide term and centrales within its justification not only protection from external attack or attack by somebody living within the State but the maintenance of Libraria and occasions.

a 'founder of dharma', as well as a source of maintenance and pleasure to everybody. He is nounsher, adviser, friend and giver of wealth to the people. He is said to be the cause of prosperity — abhyudaya — of this world' and 'gives pleasure to the eyes of the people as the moon to the scale. All these extracts clearly indicate that the protection of people is easenfailly a positive responsibility and king in supposed to attend to commonweal Sukrantir elaborately discusses the job-chart of the king by following which be could achieve the aforesaid goals.

The king as the chief executive authority, by his being a king, appoints crown-spince and the other members of the council of ministers and is advised to work in consultation with them. He is the chief appointing authority of the principal officers at the State after properly examining their ability, company, character and family etc. and not only on the basis of caste or family, 2º He is expected to supervise the working of different departments and officials by direct impection and through spices well. He is the divided to the vertical the charges levelled against the officers and dismiss them if the charges are found correct. Se

The king is called the protector of the treasure of the State. He is adviced to take his share from the people's wealth as a brother takes his legal share from the other brother He is not to levy taxes which are not stanctioned by the dharma-laturar He would make the vearly estimate of the State revenue and expenditure and see that expenditure do not exceed the provisions. An assimated expenditure of the ruler having income one lack come a very is given by Sukra himself in The king is supposed to supervise the account daily and make an estimate of the daily expenses so that required amount could be brought out of the treasury. The king is advised to increase the treasure by righteous means in normal times and by defension the normalies.

The king is supposed to issue decrees on a number of subjects in order to maintain law and order in the society A long list of the subjects, already quoted while discussing the sphere of State-authority, is supplied by Sukra, The decrees

State-drums and placing them in esplanades at writte notices. The list is comprehensive enough and includes a most all the aspects of life except the spiritual one. The kin is thus given absolute executive authority to maintain the social order, to uphold dharma and to protect the people But it is explicitly stated that the king must not violate the mitifastra : of the prince who does not follow nitt the king dom is weakened, the army is inefficient, and the civil serve is disorganized; other elements of the State get topsy-tury, so issued are to be made public by him through sounding t

learning and literature also. Sukrantu assigns the king the duty of promoting education and different arts and sciences, for this 'he should train the officers appointed with salanti seen that they at them in their - - every year who hit very high in arts and sciences. The king should always

The executive duties of the king are supposed to encourage in short, evil prevails everywhere #

take such steps as may advance the arts and sciences of the country, '20 This definitely indicates that Sukra desires to see the king a patron of arts, literature and sciences. The king, being executive head in head of the army also Protection from external attack is considered his foremost duty. He gains absolute power in war times, like modern emergency situations, and is empowered to receive from the people special grants of fines, duties etc and could take the wealth of the eich men by supplying them wherewith to live But when he is free from danger he should return the amount to them sogether with inferest " Even the killing of a brahman ru the war-field is not considered a un al The bing is made responsible for having forts well provided with war material, and contingencies as well as grains, froom, arms and treasure or The hings are considered to be almost like ourn 'by whore their strength (atmy) is not increased, by whom princes are not made to pay tribute and by whom aubiects are not well protected in

The king, however, should be kind even while performing his king, however, should sincharge his duties He should discharge his duties in a manner that does not make the subjects look upon him with terror and disrespect. A king is required to pardon offences like a mother and should not oppress his subjects He, failing in his duty as a protector of the people, is dishonoured by people and even killed by the gods. Sukranitt, thus, pays much attention on the executive functions—manily of a protective nature—of the king as this is what makes him an "upholder of dharma,"

The King as Judiciary

Protection of people and dharma is not possible without the authority to punsh the warked, Suxla, like other Hundu philosophers, attaches much importance, therefore, to the judicial functions of the king. The king, according to therault, is the highest law-court of the land. He is the last appellate authority in the State 4 The importance of justice is to recognized that the king is desired to attend the judicial work personally with other officers 44

The king, as the source of judicial system, appoints chief justice and other judicial officers of different categories after examining their cabbres #16 as davised to appoint members of jury—moblyaz—the persons who are virtuous, well—tited and capable of bearing the burden of the administration of justice like built, #7

The king, being the highest judicial authority in the land, is held responsible for the interpretation of law—a duty which he is advised to perform in consultation with the learned and virtuous once. His docusion, however, is deemed to be final as he is the highest authority to decide what is diarma (dharmasuharmanlyo/aka) and his intelligence is turerier to those of orhers.*

Sukra, however, warms that the king should decide according to the dharmatistras. He is advised to net with the help of other judicial officers, juries and that too not exercitly ⁸. Its remarkable that the king is advised to refrain from deciding the easis of dispute among brähmins regarding the interpretation of a procedure of sentifical risula and of those who practise the occult arts. 20 It appears that Sukra does not approve any interference from the State into religious affairs and wants to save the king from the wrath of occulish

King, as judiciary, astends to the function of constant punishment to the wicked which is one of his primary functions Actually, the protection of the people and punishment to the wicked are inter-related and the king, as dandodhara, it held responsible for the both. Executive and judicial functions are combined in the person of the king. The principle of total separation of powers could not be expected to be applied in a hereditary monarchy. Hence the king, according to fukramil appears as head of both executive and judicial departments of the government Hindu jutests generally regard danda superior even to the king and even Manu, a supporter of the divine theory, suggests that a king could be penalized for the offences he commits But sukrantu does not speak anything regarding the offences of the king. The king appears, though he should not be, to be immune to the normal law of the land He = 10 be punished only through revolt of the subjects or through disgrace of the gods

Protocol of the Royal Court

Sukrants depicts a detailed picture of the seating pattern and protocol to be followed in the king's court. The Ling is advised to discuss royal duties with brothers, sons, relatives, friends and commanders and members in the council house, The king is to sit in the centre of the western half of the meeting with his body-guard and retinue in his right and left. At his back proceeding from the right to the left, seats are reserved for the sons son's sons, brothers, nephews and daughter's sont successively. Uncles elder members of king's family, commanders and members are to att in the front on separate seats at the right hand moving towards the east. In the front at the left hand seats are to be keps for there in the family of maternal grandfather, muniters, cognate relaives, fathers-in-law, brothers-in-law and other officers resectively moving towards the east. The son-in-law and ister's husband are to sit on the left and right side respectrefy The friend is to be given the honour of sitting either

##P# $2979

QUIND OUT TO O

OUT OF THE STATE OF THE STATE OUT TO STAT

to Exist one, askud sate to the process of observables of observables of the control of the cont and entertaining patries one were and entertaining patries one of the king. "Lake a done one about and and play. The sons, daught third at play. The sons, daught laives and triends of the king are in the cash of minimum c behaviour sad conduct of empire iso suggested by Sukra. An official shot is foliced hands, moderately dressed a toliced hands, moderately dressed a noticed hands on the Lung and take man (man fur O)

41. Sukrangii, 1,22 42. Sukrangil, 1.60 Panikkar, K. M., Ideas of Sovereignty and State in Anci Sukrangel, 1 149 45 Sukrantil, 1 303. 46 The Cultural Heritage of India, Vol 11, p. 517. 47. Sukrangs, 4.5 267. 48. Sukrangri, 1.73-75 49. Sukranzii, 1 78-80. 50. Sukrangii, 1.64 51 Sukrantil, 2 12, 2 52. Sukrangii, 2 54-55 53. Sukrantil, 1.282-89 54. Sukrantii, 1.374-75 55. Sukrantii, 1.316,170. 56. Sukrantit, 47 27-29 57. Sukransti, 1.277-78 58. Sukrantil, 1 19. 59 Sukrantil, 1.368-70 60 Sukransti, 4 2 10-11 61. Sukrangil, 4 7 327-28 62. Sukrangii, 46 12 63. Sukrangii, 1 123 64 Sukrantil, 4531 Sukrantil, 4.5 4-5 66 Sukrantil, 4 3 23 67 Sukransii, 4 5 24-25 68 Sukrantil, 4 5 30-31 69 Sukranfil, 43 1011 70 Sukrangii, 4.3 19-20 71 Sukrangii, 1 353-62. 72 Sukrantii, 1 363 73 Sukraniii, 2 276-78 74. Subrantii, 2.231-82 75 Sakrantil, 2.278-80 Sukranell, 2.284 77 Sukraniii, 2 428-29 71 Sukranen, 215-21 79 Sakramii, 2 267-68 Et. Kans, P V. History of Dharmacastras Vol. II. # 601. 12. Sukraneir, 253-86. 1) Jekrange, 41 41-43

10 The Polity in Sakrantinara

21. S.Kraneri, 4 5 40

- 41. Sukrantii, 1,22,
- 43 Panikkar, K. M., Ideas of Sovereignty and State in D. 39-40
 - 44 Sukrangel, 1 149.
- 43 Sukrantil, 1 303
- 46. The Cultural Herstage of India, Vol 11, p. 517.
- 47. Sukraneti, 4.5 267 48. Sukraneti, 1 73-75.
- 49. Sukranzii, 1.78 80.
- 51. Sukrantil, 1.63
- 52. Sukrantii, 2 54-55
- 53 Sukrantil, 1 282-89.
- 54. Sukrantii, 1,374-75.
- 55 Sukronssi, 1.316,170
- 56. Sukranisi, 4,7.27-29. 57. Sukranisi, 1,277-78
- 58. Lukrangs, 1 19
- 59. Sukrantii, 1 363-70
- 60 Lukransti, 4 2 10-11
- 61. Sukrantil, 4 7 327-23
- 62. Sukrantit, 4 6 12
- 63. Sukranget, 1.123.
- 64 Sukrantii, 45 31 65 Sukrantii, 45 4-3
- Hii Sukrantii, 45 43
- 67. Sukransii, 4 5 24-25
- 68 Sukraners, 4 5 30-31
- 69 Sukrantii, 4 5. 10 11
- 70 Sutrangil, 4 5 19-20
- 71 Sukronsti, 1 353-62.
- 11 Sukrantsi, $ 363 73 Sukrantsi, 2 276-78
- 74. Sukrangii, 2.281-82. 75. Sakrangii, 2.273-80
- 75 Sukrameri, 2.273
- 17 Sukranici, 2 284
- 26 Sukrunger, 218-21
- 79 Sakranii, 2 267-68
- 40. Kane, P. V. History of Dharmanatras, Vot. 21, p. 60)
- 62. 4. Krancer, 285-80.
- 13 Sikramer, 4141-43
- St. Sultrumen, 4140

The Council of Mnisters

The Council of Ministers

Significance and Nacessity of the Council of Ministers

The place of the chief advisors of the king is held very high by the political timeters of the Hindus. Not only in mahabaras, archatature and Manu but even in the redux a king is advised to consult and pay respect to the opinions of the institute-reating. Ministury has been named eye in the body politic of the State by Sutrea. He attaches much importance to this organ without which the lung would not be able to see anything. In another extract the ministry and the crowaptines are ranked equal by stating that they respectively are the lift and right heads, eyes and ears of the king. The ruler without these two would be deprived of these organicals manual of actions); he, therefore, as advised in appoint them to acted in consideration to a wood great calamities?

Even a small work could be done with great difficulty of attempted by a single man; the task of tunning a Siste, he argues, saturally needs a band of advisors and assistants. Bortowing this argument from Mianu, "halvasid asserts that a wise rules—even of he is prodicted in all the scenerics and is well-streed in Siste-craffs—should never study the polineal matter alone without consulting with muniters and should always abde not by his own opinion but by the wellthoughtent decisions of the councillors, office-hearter, subjects and members attending a meeting as the king who follows only he one will is the cause of misstres and soon gris citraged from his lampdom and alicated with his sub-Saka fauther accessed.

Sukra forther argues that human conduct and grades facer are diverse and similarly diverse are the sources of knewledge making it not possible for a single man to be will-straed in; hence the king should appoint ministers to place of the chief advisors of the king is held very high to political thinkers of the Hindus. Not only in made, artifacting and Manis but even in the reds; a king friend to consult and pay respect to the opisions of the inter-arime, Ministry has been narred eye in the body tie of the State by Soilas. He attackes much importance his organ without which the king would not be after on anything. In another extract the ministry and the crowners are ranked equal by stating that they respectively are filted and right hands, vays and ears of the king. The resthout these two would be depended of these organs.

The Council of Ministers

nificence and Necessity of the Council of listers

advise and assist in the works of the State." It is eateror cally stated that a State is undoubtedly destroyed if it is deprived of the advice of the ministers who are called praketis of the State. This discussion makes it clear that Sukra is certainly got in favour of the total absolutism of the king and holds the view that for a better and efficient governance the proficest advisors in the various departments of the government are essential This idea was also prevalent in the times of Papil Supremacy in medieval Europe that these assistants are the limbs of the ruler. It is pointed out that the legates, cardnals, perdoners and other assistants of the Pope were regatded as his hands and eyes to a certain extent.?

Qualification

and fearing his anger even the king takes to virtuous ways of life as he is competent both to curse and bless, 10 The priest is superior to all others and as even the king is expected to fear his anger, he should naturally be of a highly moral as well as intellectual calibre well-versed in almost all the fastras as well in military sciences and diplomacy in The pratmidhi is required to be quick and efficient in deci. sion-making: he is called karvakarvapravijitata-one who knows what is to be done and what is not to be done. The pradhana should be efficient in managerial and supervisory faculties as he m required to have an eye on all the things concerned with the state. The sacrea should be an expert in military sciences and army management. The mantrin is required to be proficient in the science and practice of diplomacy. The pradvivaka or chief justice should be will-versed in atleast three sciences related with men (social sciences). lastras and morals. The pandit should naturally be a master in theology and ethics. The amarra is supposed to be the man who has knowledge of different kinds of land and records. The symaniza should be an expert in accounts—one who knows of the incomes and disbursements. The qualificutions of the data are emphasized in a secondary present military instruments and tactics. The priest is also activa of the latter. Can there be prosperily of the kingdon left asks, if there be ministers whom the relet does not left and address the king to gratify good ministers left went gratified with decerations, liveries of konour etc.11

The son of the outgoing king, attaining the highest posters, is advised by Selva to respect the old countries in the same marrier and the latter are advised to adopt his trace of action if reasonable but to preven them by petting of, if otherwise in It clearly implies that the experiment of otherwise in It clearly implies that the experiment or we are empowered by Sulva to delay the unreasonable offer of the king. The op-mon of the majority of king's mount and officers is highly appreciated by Sulva it he named opinion processed by many as more powerful than the big the sulvey of the

The aforesaid miracia should supply ample proof in suffi of the view that the council of ministers is regarded a post ful body exercising sufficient control over the arbitration t the Ling It has been arguedle that the Hindu mouse. could perer be arbitrary as he is advised never to purel his own ideas only and through ministers a kied of the partive and direct check of a constitutional government imposed Loon the king. No doubt that the king is adjused to respect the opinion of the ministers but he is the source of that surpority and is empowered to appoint as well as d mill arm It appears that the influence the ministers extri cvil he king according to the paleaute to eministre a moral and of stratty a constitutional one in a gaussic, Sière alere e prest with the help of the other min steps to delying a was king but no constitutional method is suggestel !! new such a step could not be considered a constitution though it could not openly be highly subjected by tal aufert in Sind if ogs kappen in gerra tref nary i met to de an and appear to become or the betterment of the king and his kingdom. Only at me place, perhaps exceptionally, it is said that one should ever point out the defects of the princes character to the ing as love of wife and children is very great 17. Otherwise, he ministers are always required to be bold and intelligent nough to point out the royal defects and dissuade the king rom unrighteous path Sokra, thus, appears to favour the appointment of strong and efficient ministers and does not approve of ministers behaving his sycophants, It as the strong character and personality of the minister that would work as a check on the arbitrariess of the king.

strength of the council of ministers. Arthalastra mentions different opinions which tell us that some scholars were in n normal times, the king, however, is supposed to respect be opinions of the ministers and the latter minister to work

Constitution of the Ministry Hindu thinkers are not unanimous over the question of the favour of twelve, sixteen and even twenty menisters 18 But most of the thinkers agreeing with Manu and mahabharata. appear to favour the idea of a ministry consisted of seven or eight persons. Sukrantti also refers to this view but the author himself proposes a council of ten ministers. These ten are designated as purchita, pratimithi, pradhan, saciva, mantrin, predvivak, pandit, sumantrak, america and duta and called praketts of the king. In the list of eight ministers mentioned in sukrantii, the purchita and the data are omitted. The two lists differ over the matter of remuneration also According to the first the monthly remunerations are one-tenth more than those of subsequent men upto the data but in the second list all the eight ministers have equal remuneration. The data, according to second view, iii servant of the king and other prakrits, hence he is not mentioned with the ministers Sukrantu also decides the hierarcy of all the ten ministers : the priest is reparted as superior to all the others followed by pranmahi (viceroy), pradhan (premier), sacıya, mantrin, prādvivāk, pandıs, sumantra, amāsya and the data succesively in the order 10 favours the idea of appointing persons as the work-load demands but he does not give them the status equal to that of councillors. In modern terminology, they are likely to be equated with deputy ministers or secretaries

Working of the Ministry

The king is advised to consult the ministers over important and confidential matters in secret places like the inner spartments of the house in the night or cleared forests in the day 21 The ministers are supposed to give their opinions with all their arguments to the king who madvised to compare them with his own opinion and then take the decision approved by the majority.23

The councillors are advised to present their proposal to the king through proper channel The mantrin, pradvivak, pandit and the data should write "This document has been written with my consent." The amatya should make his note well written in this, the sumanira should make his how The pradhan should write 'true'. The pratinahi is to comment 'it can now be approved' The crown-prices should make a recommendatory note 'It should be accepted' and the priest should order the approval by writing 'approved' over it They all are required to put down their signs. tures and seals and the king, after seeing their signatures etc., should accept it by signing with seal 28 Sukra, thus, makes the whole ministry responsible for the decisions. Each proposal is required to go through atleast six ministers to come before the king Each minister is supposed to comment in writing with all his arguments Any proposal, through this process, is bound to be well-discussed with all the different aspects by different competent persons The king is supposed to put trust in the ministers and accept their advices as, being busy in a number of other things, he does not have enough time and energy required to examine the different aspects of all the problems by himself. Sukra, in other words, makes the ministers actually responsible for the State work.

. Sukra also favours the idea of transferring the ministers to other's departments, He is against any minister becomtoo powerful and states that the ten praketis should be vested with equal authority. The king is advised never in give any office for ever to anybody and everybody with the argument that everybody is likely to be intoxicated by the driaking of the vanity of offices.28

Functions of various Ministers

Names of various ministers appear in many treatises but no authority, except Sukra, has dealt with the division of work among the different ministers. Sukrantit is the only grantha which gives us some ideas about the different portfolios of the musters, bence it is also pagested that department usually should be divided on the lines suggested by Sukra The duttes and functions of the cach minister is to be under stood as discussed below according to sukrantitistra

Purchita: Purchita or purodha (priest) appears to be the chief advisor to the king He is regarded as superior to al other ministers and is supposed to guide the king in th matters secular as well as religious. Any proposal to be pu before the king for approval, according to Sukra, must fire be cleared by the purphita after getting commented upon it all other ministers. He is prominently mentioned in th Vedic w well as epic literature as preceptor to the king ar selfless defender of the State from all sorts of dangers at calamities, Sukraniti calls him one whose anger even mak the king fear and hence who is responsible for making hi refrain from sinful path and take to the virtuous ways life. A description of his qualities?4 clearly implies that was supposed to ascertain that all the things should move accordance with the dharamailistra and counter the secumi well as divine calamities by offering right advice a performing religious merifices, prayers etc. He is empower by Sukra to engineer the department of the victous king a the installation of the new ruler from the family of removed one with the approval of the other praktits $7 T amply demonstrates the status, significance and respons lay of the parchite, in the State affairs as envisaged fukrantsi. It is to be noted that the name of purchita d not appear in the second list mentioning only eight p referred to by Sukra as proposed by some other thinker ministers in the Maratha administration bear the same nomenclature as that of the ministers mentioned in fukraniti. The main function of pradhan appears to control the total administration and to integrate the work of different denartments in order to have the policies of the same not differentiating from each other. He is the back-bone of the king's secretariat

Sacrea . Sacrea is the designation for the war-minister. Some call him senapati. Sukrantii elaborately discusses his duties. It is stated: The sacrea has to study the elephants, horses, chariots, foot-soldiers, camels, oxen, bandsmen, ensign bearers, men who practise battle-arrays, men who are sent eastward and westward (on mission), bearers of royal emblems, arms and weapons, attendants of superior, ordinary and inferior grades, and the various clases of ammunitions. he has to find out the groups that are complete in all their parts, how many of these are in active condition, how many are old and how many new, how many are unfit for work and how many troops are well-equipped with arms, ordinance and gunpowder, and what is the amount of commissariat and other contigencies. Then he has to communicate the result of his studies to the king. *2 This passage clearly shows that sacing, according to Sukra, is to look-after the military administration and advises the king as to the ways and means of strengthening the army it has been rightly commented that the title saciya is not the 'usual designation' by which he is known, 23 He is supposed, to see, according to lukromity. that all the parts of the army are efficient and resourceful and the forts are well-protected. He malso required to have a knowledge of other kings' strength and make his own army competent to face them. The duties of a modern war or defence minister are assigned to him.

Manttin . The duties of mantrin as narrated in lukrantti could be equated with those of a modern minister for foreign or external affairs. It is pointed out that the mahasandhivis grahaka-the highest officer incharge of peace and war-of the inscriptions and sumantrin of Sirafi are the same kind of minister as that of the four-fold policy of same (peace). dana (appeasement), danda (punishment) and bheda (dissection). He is made responsible for studying the desirability and effects of any of the four in each case for advising the king to adopt the most proper course of action. "Sukra himself has elsewhere discussed the effects of the each part of the four-fold policy in relation to different types of friends and enemies

Pradvivaka The pradvivaka or chief-justice is the highest judicial authority, except the king himself, of the land. He is supposed to study each case in all its aspects and through all types of examinations secular as well as occult by himself and by consulting other peers in Council and then advise the king regarding the proper decision of the case keeping in view the reasoning, direct observation, inference and analogy as well as the local customs,35 In the absence of the king, he m authorized to administer the judicial deliberations. He is called pradvivaka as he enquires (therefore prat) and takes decisions by analysing cases and judging disputes (hence vivaka).26 But it is to be noted that some other ministers like the priest and the amatya and brahmans are also to be sometimes consulted in the judicial deliberations. The king is advised by Sukra to look into the cases according to the dharmatastras-in the company of the Chief-Justice well as the amarya, brahmana and the purcheta 47 This may perhaps explain why the pradvivaka is not mentioned as a separate minister in the Hindu inscriptions In the presence of purolity and amatya, his status is naturally lowered and he could not function as independently as a minister of a department is required to do He is supposed to act according to the dharmalastras and purchita in considered the highest authority over the same

Pandita The pandita is expected to be an authority over the of moral conduct. Sukra appears to favour the view at rules of moralisy may vary according to place, time and The pandit, therefore, is supposed to study of moral conduct in ancient as well as contempoimes, and by making a comparative study of the moral advised in the lating and the local customs be should suggest changes as required by time, place and circumstances—but alaways in time with the spirit of aharma. It is suggested, though Sukra does not mention it, that donations from the State to temples, monastries, and centre of learning etc. must have fallen within the jurisdiction of this department. The could be regarded as the chief advisor in matters of socio-religious policy of the State but it is not clear if he was incharge of the department for donations (Danavibhāga), Sivāji also had a timister called panditrāo in blis cabinet.

Sumantar Savah designated his foreign minister as sumanta (rumantim) but tukrantil assigns the profolio of treasury to the sumantar. He is made uncharge of the department of finance and is supposed to study the accounts and control them. It is stated that he 'should communicate the king the amount of commodities laid by, the amount of debts etc., the amount of commodities laid by, the amount of debts etc., the amount per and the amount surplus or balance in both movables and immovables during the 'pear's it could very well 'assignment and the amount spread to see that in the state of the State is supposed to the supp predecessor to modern experts

inster
the have a hous
or unestimate of and jewels. He and fines these up and for all kinds

misters 93

General References

1. Sukrangti, 1 62 2. Sukrangii, 2.12-13. 3. Manu. 7.53. 4 Sukrantti. 21-4. 5. Sukrantti. 2.3-7. 6. Sukranttl. 281. 7 Sukrangii, (tr. B. K. Sarkar), p. 57. 8. Bukrantel, 27-9. 9. Sukrantti, 2.10-11. 10. Sukrantti, 2 78-80 11. Sukarniti, 2 80-81. 12. Sukrangti, 2 92 13. Sukranget, 5 21-22. 14. Sukrantti, 4.7.419. 13. Sukrangti, (tr. B. K. Sarkar), p 54 16 Aukarnett, 2 274-75. 17. Sukrantii, 2,260-61. 18. Arthafastra, Book I Chapter 15. 19. Sukrantzi, 2,71-78. 20. Sukrantti, 2.111. 21. Sukrangti, 1.353 22. Aukrantzi, 2 366. 23. Sukrantti, 2.365-71. 24 Sukrantii, 2,109-114. 25 Altakar, A. S. State and Government to Ancient India, p. 67 26. Sukrantti, 2,78-80. 27, Sukrantti, 7,274-75. 28. Alteakar, A. S., State & Government in Ancient India, p 169. 29. Sukranssi, 1.89. 30. Altekar, A II . State and Government in Ancient India, p 169. 31. Sukransii, 1.90. 12. Sakrantti, 291-95. 33 Altekar, A. S., State and Government in Ancient India, p. 170 14. Sakrangi, 296 15. Sukrantel, 2.97-99. 36. Sukrantit, 4 5 62-63 31. Sukrantti, 4.5.5. 38. Sukrangi 2.100-102.

39. Altekar, A. S., State and Government in Ancient India, p 173.

40. Sukrantii, 1.102-3 41. Sukrantii, 2.104-7. 42. Sukarntii, 1.234.

•

General Administration: Principles and Practice

General Administration: Principles and Practice

Philosophy of Administration

An a work, rome a trifle one, could be done with difficulty by only one man, the work of a state is not possible to be performed without a number of helpters*—hence the need for an administrative structure. The wise ruler is, therefore, advised to perform the daties with the help of counciliors, office-beaters, subjects and members attending a mecture. These all are parts of the administrative organization of the State. Any single individual is not likely to possess variety of intellectual gifts required for various functions of the State and to know the varieties of human behaviour—the king or ruler, therefore, as expected to appoint assistants of different kinds and grades after examining their merits a Sukrantif lays down the principle of organization in order to build an administrative structure to implement the policies of the king accordant to dharma.

The following tests for a viable philosophy of administration have been pointed out by some modern thinkers*:

- (a) Il must bring into focus all elements entering into ad- ministrative action.

 (b) Where possible principles are developed, it should be borne in mind that they are valid guides to future action
- under substantially similar conditions.

 (c) All elements entering into administrative action should be integrated and brought not a system of proper and
- be integrated and brought into a system of proper and unified relationship.

 (d) Administration is concerned with both ends and means.
 - The skilful fusion of the two is the test of administrative excellence.

(c) A philosophy of administration should be constant such a way that, if it describes reality and provi reliable tool to the executive, it constitutes a grand to which exceeds the sum of its parts. (f) A good administrative system should communicate spirit and rounded feeling of widespread satisfaction. Sukra appears to agree to this philosophy of administratio The primary task of the different kinds of assistants of the king a to help the latter in the performance of his duty towards the subjects and these duties are described as pro tection of the people and punishment to the wicked, sukt elaborately discusses what the different parts of the Stat could do to perform these tasks-hence each part of the administrative organization is brought into proper focus. The council headed by the Ling or the king-in-council is instru mental in integrating and bringing into a system of unified relationship all the elements entering into administrative action. The king, as head of administrative organization, is supposed to supervise the working of all the departments All the proposals are made to come before him through a number of ministers and some of the ministers are linked even with the judicial administration All this implies a definite linkage of the various departments of the government. So far as the ends and means are concerned, the state employees are directed to work for the prosperity of the state as well as that of the people and advised against doing anything which is harmful to the people, though may be good for the king. Sukra not only cares for public welfare and prosperity of the king but pays more attention to the well-being of the administrative personnel. The king II advised to satisfy both his servants (administrative personnel), and subjects according to their qualifications, some by inreading out branches, others by giving fruits." His concept of administration, thus, comes out successful in the tests prebubed even by modern thinkers taking into account the (sions of Hindu tradition.

istrative Departments contil obviously divides the different types of administra-

functions mainly in ten departments each headed by a - . . to Calcontitutes minister as discussed in the preceding chapter. But Sukra makes it clear that there are some more departments to be run not by minuers but by other qualified officers, Officers other than ministers appointed by the king are made separate in-charges of the departments dealing with elephants, horses, chariots, infantry, cattle, camels, deer, birds, gold, jewel, silver, clothes, treasure, grains, cooking, parks, buildings, and palaces seperately as also-household and contingencies, religious establishments and the charities. In each village and town six officials namely the lord of sahas, the headman of the village, the collector of land revenue, the clerk, the collector of taxes (tolls and duties), as also the news-bearer are to be appointed.7

It is thus quite obvious that Sukra has distributed the administrative responsibilities among a number of departments and it may also be inferred that each department is likely to be distributed among a number of sections dealing with different aspects of the main responsibility. There appears no use of separate departments for silver, gold and jewels each. Sukra himself wants only one person as head of the department dealing with all these things together when he says ; that man is to be in-charge of gold, jewels, silver and coins who can distinguish their values by their weight, shape, lustre, colour and resemblance," It may well be inferred that Sukra appears to incorporate all these things in one department with different sections headed by separate specialists under one specialist as head of the department,

Categorization of the Employees

Different categories of various kinds of employees are clearly iministration.

and cadres imber of state supplies some valuable .. of administrative per-

The first category is constituted of the different ministers leaving scope for some inner hierarchy. They are supposed to head important departments and also to advise the king over important matters of general interests. The king is expected to make all the important decisions in consultation with all the members of the council and not only with the Head of the concerned department who appears to be solely responsible for routine affairs only.

General Administration : Principles and Practice

The category next so that of ministers is constituted of in-

Head of the concerned department who appears to be story responsible for rounne affairs only.

The category next to that of ministers is constituted of incharges of the various departments not headed by the numsters. These officers are called adhyshka or adhign shares of superintendents). It may well be inferred that their adhies share or superintendents are not of one and the same grade. It is not likely that Superintendent of the army and that of the birds are to be remunerated in uniformity But slid of the birds are to be remunerated in uniformity But slid of the constitute as separate category.

The third category belongs to inspectors called dalakar.

Sukra advises the king to appoint three men for each depatment—the wisest of them all at the bead and the two others as inspectors and overseter (darptakas) for there, five, seveor ten years, and having noticed each officer's qualifaction for the work entrusted be abould make the necessary changes '3º These darlakas appear to be chief deputies of the Head of the department in the effective implementation if the state policy. The number of darkakas could be increased or reduced according to the importance of the jurisdiction to be mininged—even only one officer with no darlaka could be appointed if the king feets no need for one 11. The fourth category appears to be that of cirks, seribes and terminology on the basis of the passage that tells that the subordinate (openal-a) may become the chief in time through constant service. 18 Next comes the category of attandents and manual workers with gravity to different kinds of attendants and manual workers to be approprieted by the king 18 They are equivalent services in maintain records etc and do the field work. Some inner hierarchy is naturally in he maintained according to the nature and responsibility of the work. These may be designated as subordunate services in modern needed in different departments as well as in personnel service of the king. Some magicians and tantrikus are also included in this list who naturally should form a different grade, Similarly a goldsmith and a washerman are not likely to be ranked equally. We, therefore, may divide this category in two sub-categories leaving the scope for inner gradation as well seeing the long list which, however includes almost all the vocations. The first sub-category may be constituted of the Hilps; and king's personal servants etc., while the second belongs to the unskilled manual labourers and the men engaged in lower works like carrying nightsoil etc Thus Sukra, obviously, envisages a well-structured administrative system to meet the requirements of the State. The comprehensive list of the officers includes the specialists and their deserving assistants from almost all walks of life over which the State, according to Sukra, has its jurisdiction Even the fowler, repairer, washerman and the mehatars are not overlooked, what to say of the higher officers.

Qualifications and Responsibilities of Prominent Officials

Sukrantti, prior to prescribe detailed qualifications for each important post separately, lays down some general qualifications to be fulfilled to become a good employee The king is advised to examine these general desirabilities in an employee before the recrustment. II is suggested that just as gold is tested by reference to lightness or heaviness of weight, colour, sound etc . so also servants should be examined by reference to their work, companionship merits, habits, family relations etc by the king and he should place confidence in one who is found to be trustworthy 14

Heredity is generally regarded as an essential qualification for higher and confidential posts. Sukra also supports the view but not blindly. The priority is to be given to higher borns of they possess other qualities but simply a birth in higher family with lesser qualifications is not to be preferred in the recruitment policy. He makes it clear by stating that work, character and merit are to be respected-neither caste nor family. He is absolutely correct that neither by caste nor by family can superiority be asserted and one should ret notice only the easte for race) or only the family in rAvs it the election H Sukra puls much emphasis on the beenty and the knondness in the state recruitment: Truth and P liathropy are the two most acced virtues—the king should always have acreads having these virtues and 'fary in the greatest of all sins, mendacity is greater than eavy, The king should not have servants having these vircus. It Qualifications and obligations of some important posts as presented by Sukra are discussed below:—

(1) Goff-Airport The man who is expert in the study of the elephants, the methods of training them, their distants and treatment, the art of nourshing them and who knows (Art behaviour and can climb them and guide their mostements, should be appointed to take care of elephants. It

(ii) Attassing The man who knows feeling cause and behaviour of the horses and can guide, train and treat the who is aware of their restlie, spirit and disease, trainent as well as nourishment and who knows of their weight the capacity for bearing weights, their teeth and their agrainty should be appointed superintendent of horses it should be appointed superintendent of horses it.

(iii) Parkilyhadeka. The man who with aff these qual for these knows of the yoke and the burden, who have so filter these parking and the burden, who haves of the strength of charees, and is skilled in moving, resting and the eight end about who be movements of charloss for forestee the a most filter greenes and who haves how to fixture and present the horse should be appointed it mistry of a survey.

Remission of the second process of the second of the second of the material second of the material second of the s on a non-narge notate departments of grid size?

E none whiching tents and farmire grant!

There gas b and focuse building and paid of a tent and navy possible for the about the size and navy possible for the size and

The second second second second

^{* 250} m $12100" 1214

there are many functions involving multiple effects and the king should appoint officers for the discharge of such functions also after considering their fitness for these #1

Some important officers may separately be mentioned readables: Those who are well-wered in nitiataria, the use of arms and ammunitions, manipulations of battle-arrays and the art of management and discepline, who are not too young but of middle age, who are brave, best controlled, able-bodied, always mindful of their duties, devoted to their matters and batters of rememes should be made commanders and solders irrespective of their being even súdras or descended from milecthias $2.

Danadiyakha: He is expected to supervise the distribution of charities from state to talented persons as well as to the netdy and the beggars. He should, therefore, be a person who does not disappoint any beggar, does not amass wealth and is charitable by nature. He should be able to detect the merits of others and should have no greed and sloth and is expected to be kind, sweet-worded and aware of the objects of charity.39

Devatuality at: He is supposed to superintend the religious establishments and institutions hence he it required to Possess obedience to his own duties in life as well as devo-tion to religious practices and should have no greed and hankering. #

Sahasādhip: He appears to be responsible for maintenance of law and order and, therefore, is required to be neither too cruel not too leasent. 25

Glamadhipa: He is appointed to protect the villagers from affertsions, thieves and also from officers. His behaviour should be like that of patrints. If appears that gramadhipa is tomewhat superior to såkalådhipa and both have some formom duttes to perform.

Bhagahara: He is collector of taxes from people He is required to be kind and just. Sukra compares him with the Eardener who collects flowers and fruits after having duyl nourished the trees with care 27 Lekhaka: He is required to maintain records in different matters and perhaps sometimes may be required to deal with office properties etc. He is, therefore, espected to have skill in accounts and to write without vagueness and hisktion. He should know of the differences between countries and languages.

Saulkika He mappointed to collect duties etc from tradets He should, therefore, behave in such a way m not to destroy their capital as Goudhachara He is a spy supposed to inform the king about the feeling and behaviour of people and employes as well as of enemies. He should, therefore, be adopt in understanding the activities of enemies, subjects and stream and be able to reproduce fashfully what they hear (should have a retentive memory and understanding of human expirisions and movements).

Antapura Sersant. He is to serve in the innec apartiment of king is palace. Those who are sexless, truthful, sweet-iongs, ed, dorne of respectable families and are of beautiful forms should be appointed in the inner apartments. By king girst a comprehensive list of the other servants to be appointed by the king for his own welfare and satisfaction. Thus list includes, among others, the songsters, artisanism and artist, poets, fools ventriloquists dancers and hariequins, poetities as well as guinners, makers of artificial forests, makers of lighter machines, gun-powder, arrows etc., potters, catpenters tallors, barbers, washers, goldsmiths, coppermith, soilors, miners and even fowlets and persons to carry night-soil. These all are expected to have commendable experime in their respective fields.

Sukta should be highly appreciated for the detailed description of the qualifications and duries of the employes of different cades and departements. But sometimes he give contradictory statements regarding the consideration of caste in making the effection. Ten advisors of the king are required to be highmans but in the absence of a deserving highmand. Sukra agrees to appoint a deserving kingthy in his absence also a deversing subject—but he never recommends. a failer, even a qualified one, for such a higher poster while he agrees to the principle that inenther casts no re family should be a measurement of supernority and it should be taken notice of in making a selection "It may appear that in the absence of the deserving candidate of the prescribed caste, some one from the lower but not lädera caste could be considered. But Subra categorically dense the possibility of the appointment of a waxya to the post of the commander. The commander is to be a kazirja, and in his absence a bribman. Neither walfya, nor gibba nor a coward "It appears that Sakra, being a pragmatic thinker, does favour the deserving one irrespective of caste or family but the tigidity of warnadharma does not allow him to give a definite opinion.

Relations between the King end the Employees Sukraniii favours the feeling of mutual trust and welfare between the king and the employees without which no state can prosper. It has been emphatically declared that the wealth is there always present where the officers and the king both are in good relationship #8

The servants are expected to have complete loyalty to the king and consequently always watch king's interests even at the cost of their life : 'I am sure to accomplish first what in absolutely necessary for the king even though at the risk of life Please command me-thus saying one (the employee) should at once proceed with the work according to one's ability. And one should sacrifice even his life for great deeds and for kings." The employer is supposed to protect the king by even one's own wife, children and wealth at proper time,35 He should respect not only the king but his friends and relatives as well and should come immediately to him leaving thousand important actions when called by the king a Sukra expects the servant to respect the king as if the latter is the second self of Vishnu. Sukranite advises the servant not to desert a good king even if he has fallen into distress as one should always wish for the good of him whose food he has taken once in life. The king is protector, hence good of him should always be wished.48 Sukra elaborately discusees the rules of behaviour of the employees with high bit the central theme is toyally with respect. Sukin tells the their grades of the seriants according to their attitude: The exellent servant is he who is devoted to the mixter. The molocie in he who series the giver of remonstration. The each servant is he who series another misster, even though mantained by one?

The king, on the other side is also supposed to have love, trust and kindness for his employees and to satisfy them in order to make them work enthusiastically. He is advised to satisfy his servants (and also the people) according to their qualification some by spreading out branches, other by giving fruits He should be gentle and smiling and sweettongued and should offer good feast clothes, and betels and wealth The king is advised to enquire about well-being of his servants and to effer gifts and royal honours. He should gratify them by mercy obersance respect, attendance, services knowledge love affection, association, offer of half one's seat of the full reat, praise or recital of the deeds done for the good of other 12 The ling thus, is expected to take cognition of local and able servants and to encourage them by different methods if the kirs does not care or has, no lose for the employee, the latter to advised by Subra to trace the former the sers int should desett such a king as does not remember good done for II m m not satisfied with good service does not remember the connictions bitween comarks is superious and girenpin to fielings when ogges and as Sukra obstructs does not fire . Paren tream out with the employees and miles them er my aftick or fr ma see by harsh words lin water service from the costs and in its trings a us in the servant the are dust the enters and those who are satisfied with materiant I - west by at test one and pushed by mil * If The Are where the is at a rec 44 to his to be if a that debruge groups. A geophisis the this is not the matter asparts and the fire Bit is a table of groups are groups as day a 1 has to 5 of the bit is a construct a table of the bit is a construct a table of the bit is a construct by the state of a rate.

gations. Sukra gives the example of Rāma and the monkeys to explain the mutual cordiality of the servants and the king and asserts that the excellent servant does never desert his master in difficulty and similarly the excellent master could sacrifice his life for his servant.

Characteristics of a good Employee

Sukra describes in detail the main characteristics of a good tervant. He is required to be truthful, meritorious, celebrated and the wealthy (this perhaps cannot be taken as essential characteristic) my well as a man of higher birth whose habits are good and who, doing good deeds without any sloth, performs the duties of their master even better than their own work by the four-fold qualities of body, speech, thought and diligence. He should be satisfied with salary only, is sweet-tongued, expert in action, pure and firm, skilful in doing good to others and is averse to evil ways. He is advised to observe even the son or father of the master if they make any injury to the latter He never protests the statement of his master, nor does give any publicity to his shortcomings. He is free of envy, never snsult any body and pays respect to his master's wife, children and friends, He is always unambitious and contented and never encroaches upon the rights of others. He is expected to put on the clothes, ornaments etc. offered by the king to show his gratitude and always spends according to his salary, He is courageous but simultaneously moderate and kind. Sukra calls him excellent servant who in private discusses the evil deeds of his master with the latter but never gives publicity to them.4

Characteristics of a bad Employee

A bad employee, obviously, does not possess any of the qualities described above. One who is underpraid and have been expended to the states, as cheat, coward, great yellarly punished for his faults, as cheat, coward, coward, and the possessing the states of the company of the company of the company of the passionate, the visious, the distance, acker of bribes, the gambler, the atheist, the vain and dishonest as well as tortious, an ansulted one, practed by harsh words, the frend reservant of the enemy, the frenceous and the daring as well as the strengthness one can ensure the a good officer, 47

Sukra, thus, realizes the contribution of loyal and efficient employees in administration and advises the king to tree gaize and maintain them. One who is not interested mix prospectify of the king and the people at large and is intituted only in money could never be commendable for product efficient administration.

Service Conditions

Sukrantii puts much emphasis on the sainfaction of bit employee as a dissatisfied servant, far from being an asit, becomes an enemy of the king it has been stated to master by harsh words, low wages, server punnhimets ad insult brings out in the servant the attitude of the enerSukru, therefore appears in favour of satisfactory strucconditions in order to make the employee feel satisfied salhence be grateful to the king life has elaborately discussed the principles regarding wages, permotion, transfer, leaved dismissif etc.

Dages Sukrunisi mentions three kinds of wages at Aryumina, Ralumina and Raryukalamiti paid according to time, work or according to both and futher explain the same if one is portfor an assigned work (this weight in to be carried by jour whither, and I shall give you to make the pain of the payment in a control payment in a called Agramany and if the payment in made on the basis of time (every pear, month or day) that is made on the basis of time (every pear, month or day) that is made on the basis of the form of the made on the basis of both (so much work) to be done by you at so much turn and I shall pay you so much it is

Sakra hi wever favous a system of wages which even at the forest of soft sent to maintain the comployee with his diposition with a state of the forest transfer and the soft sent transfer at the soft sent transfer at the soft sent transfer at the state of the most as well as most additional soft sent transfer at the state of the most as well as most of soft sent transfer at the state of the state of the soft sent transfer at the soft sent transfer well as the soft sent transfer which is the soft sent transfer which is the soft sent transfer which is the soft sent transfer at the soft se

by the king that the servant may maintain those who are his computors responsibilities. When a pragmatic thinker Sutra rightly waras the king that the servants getting low wages are enemies by nature, helpers of opponents and seekers of opportunities and plunderers of reasure and people. It is natural that a low paid employee, who is not able to maintain his family by the wages alone, is likely to be corrupted by the emmes and other sellish and vicious persons. The king, therefore, is advised to pay as much at maintain that the servant may not fall prey to enemies under the computions of fulfilling he bases needs

Sukra favours the idea of fixing wages also according to the speed of the worker. He mentions three types of servants ie. in-active, ordinary and quick, their wages have to be fixed accordingly and are called same, madh; a and Freshtha, respectively. 18

But Sutra, even in his wage policy, appears to be swayed by centif considerations. He recommends wages which could supply more than mere food and clothing to swiece-borns but draws a separate rule for Ridrax and recommends that wages of Ridrax is to be just enough for food and raiment. It is, thus, evident that Sukra comes very close to modern experts in the science of wage—flation A combination of metil, need and efficiency is to be made to fit; the rates of wagst—almost all the modern pay commissions are required to take these three into consideration in order to formulate a wages policy with least anamolies. Sukra deserves to be appreciated for adopting such a liberal wages policy—with the only exception of Sudras—in a monarchical order without felling the pressure of trade-unions and strikes

Promotions and Dismissal

Sukrenti, in order to reward the efficient workers as well as to punish the mefficient or vicious servant, lays down a policy for promotions and demotions. It as clearly stated that the increases in the sulary should be made according to the qualitative development of the servant by the king carefully for his own welfare. If a monther passage the same view IF styressed: as the officer becomes outsides for the hader and higher functions, he should be appointed to the higher and higher post. At the end he should be a prokpti (one of the ten advisors),  The employees are, therefore, advised to be loyal and efficient in order to reach the top of the ladder. The subordinate is lakely to become the chief in time prough constant service; and reversely the chief may also become subordinate through idleness in service and it is declared that the man who me ever serviceable and performs his mork enthusiantically soon becomes a favourite of the king. **

The above passage, however, also lays down the principle of demotion for inefficiency and idleness in service. Sukra puis much emphasis on this aspect by referring it again and again. The king is advised to take the side of the aggrieved people and not that of the unjust servants He = expected to examine the concerned case impartially and to take necessary action against the guilty officers. Sukra asserts that the king should remove an officer from the service if hundred people make complaint against him The guilty minister, if he is the first defaulter, should be punished by the king in private but should be punished in public and removed from the service if he proves a regular offender The king is advised to take away all the property belonging to an unjust mfficer who does not behave according to the netifastras 17 It is also stated that an mefficient and undeserving person should be replaced by a deserving one to perform the duties of a post but the preference should be given to the son of the removed one if he possesses the required ability sa The king is advised against the servants who are cruel, dishonest and untruthful 49

It appears that Sukra, thus, favours the theory of the promotion of servants according to the merits. The principle of mere seniority fails to gain any ground in takentil! It is left that basic necessities of all types of servants should be met but the criterions for promotion to the higher posts could not be any thing but merit. This, undoubtedly, sounds a 'thy object.

oy. . . Sukra appears to share the modern view that an oyee should not remain on the same post for longer periods. He argues that as one III likely to get intoxicated by drinking the wine of power, no body should be allowed to remain on the same seat for longer time The king is advised never to give any office for ever to any body and every body. The king should appoint other man in his place after examining his fitness or the apprentice who is qualified for that task or even outsider in his absence. The king may appoint the son of the preceding officer, if he m qualified, in the place of his father, Sukra advises the king to appoint the predecessor to some other department if the latter is qualified,44 Sukra extends this principle even to the council of ministers and advises the king to transfer them to each post by rotation or according to their qualifications 41

The Polity in Sukranitistra

This transfer policy makes the employees competent for various and different functions of the state besides keeping the administrative ministries toned up

Leave : Sukrantit frames the rules for various kinds of leave for servants in detail. The servants should be granted leave for one yama during day time and for three yamas during night for the discharge of their domestic duties and taking rest etc. The servant appointed only for day time should be made free for half-a yama. It appears that Sukra is in favour of keeping holidays on occasions of festivities but essential services are to be performed even during such holidays by the servant except, of course, traddha days. The king abould allow a respite of fifteen days a year from the work with full remuneration **

Sukra also sanctions medical leave to the servants with, although, some deduction in the actual remuneration. A leave for one week on medical grounds is to be sanctioned with full pay. If the employee falls ill for a longer period but has worked for five years, he should be granted leave with a quarter less than the usual remuneration, He m til be given three months salary at the most of he falls oll for one year. He can be given six months salary in the case of illness contiquing for more than one year But no body is allowed to get more than that in any case. Sukra, in that case, offers some solace to the diseased person by advising the king to appoint or substitute the man who is suggested by the for mer Sukra, however, suggests to pay half the wages to an ill servant if he is highly qualified.*

There can be no doubt that Sukra, while framing the rules of ordinary of domestic as well as medical leaves, has takes into account not only human considerations but he interior of the state as well By suggesting to appoint a representation of the diseased person as his substitute, he attempts to bridge the diseased person as his substitute, he attempts to bridge the diseased person has he had been as the disease that the disease interests of both the parties.

Pention and bonuseic. It is a pleasant surprise that but a Sanda once pension to the retired man and his family. The his is at sked to give for the half of the regular salary without ming him to do any work in the man who has served the kas for forty years; to his timeor or tecapable son and similarly his wife and unmartered daughters half of the pension of the returned servant. The king is expected to give one-eighth of the regular salary as yearly reward and the more sale pit ones who have done the work with speed and efficiency see to be given one-eighth of the remuneration of the work come as known by how booms.

If the death of the servant occurs while working for the kings, the son of the forger would receive the full salay of the deceased until he as a major and the kings sepecied then to appoint him after examining his qualification. The king-according to Sukra, should active and deposit one-sittle one-fourth of the regular salary of the employee and should pay half of the amount so collected or sometiment in full in two or three years. 85 ome scholars see here the idea of establishing a kind of Provident Fund suggested by Sukra.

A close scrutiny of the service conditions as suggested by Sukra leaves no doubt of his being a gractical at well size humane thinker Satisfaction of the worker, secording 10 modern researches in the science of management, is shayl's contributory factor in the deficiency and that set of the productivity of the worker. Sukra, automsthingly appears is understand this complex idea very well and then extempts to make the king satisfy his employees for his own welfare. No prominent Hindu thanker, except Sukra and Kaustlya, has paid so much attention to the satisfaction of the worker. Kautilya, like Sukra, also does discuss the service rules and the benefits for the employees in detail 47 Manu has not paid any attention to this side and Rhishma, though describes the characteristics of good servants in detail, does not suggest any principles or rules for the welfare of the administrative personnel. Sukra should, therefore, be appreciated for his original and remarkable ideas regarding the welfare of the employees of the State

Code of mutual conduct of Servants

Sukra is well awage of the envies and consequent factionalism among the servants. He, therefore, does not encourage any sort of back-bring. He advises officers not to envy each other, nor to get into conflicts They should work within their jurisdiction decided by the king. An officer is not expected to talk of other's faults to any body, even to the king who is also advised not to express deeds of another officer though he has heard of them nor should he hear of them through some other source of This is likely to create a cordial atmosphere and mutual trust between the various kinds of employees and would naturally result to administrative efficiency and prosperity of the king and the subjects as well an of the employees.

Office procedure

Office procedure, like service rules, has been discussed in great details by Sukra, A portion of it has already been discussed while dealing with the working of the Council of Ministers which does not need any repetition Only it could be pointed out that any proposal or suggestion could come to the king only through proper channel from the Head of the concerned department via amatia, sumantea, pratinidhi, crown-prince and the purchita **

The most important thing in the official procedure in the emphasis on written papers. The employee should present his proposal in written form and the authorities, even the king himself, mexpected to make their order in writing duly signed with seal. Sukra asks the servant not to do any thing without written state-order. The king is also expected to order any thing big or small in writing. Sukra argues that the writen document not only acress as a record but is the best guide in confusion to rot or ris human. He goes to the extent of calling those employees and even the large thirtes who prefer to do any thing without written documents 75 Shifted mostly think written order from the large should Sukra insists that the written order from the king should also bear the scal with his signatures. He tells us about the categories of written documents one bearing the king's seal in the seal and hand-writing is the best—as the king's seal in the real king, the document signed by the king without tells of a good saluding-arran-while that signed by ministers in meality arma and that written by the criticens is inferior. But all are called a mit the reports of their work-progress daily, monthly annually and once during many years 73 ft appears that these reports would serve as a written proof of one's merit and efficiency in the consideration for promotions. They are expected to munious a record tile (amptipatra) for men are likely to torget or mistake past things 72 Sukra's emphasis on written documents and record tile are of much significance even in modern times for the seasonable methods of public administration Luch and every thing is required to be explained tally and should establi an impersonal character, hence emphasis on written viders etc Subsurfit talks of a norther of written documents called putto of garraka of which many are concerned with the government work the written continents are classified in two main kinds the first craft with the description of works or detas and the second to concerned with the accounts work ?? The first is an entirerized with the general administra-

to makily the second is mainly related to resenue affairs. It would be to the form round is resone of the documents related by the period of "more that on A design ment which confairs by generate for above or at most off the details and off the form of the third that the form of the period of the details and off the form of the details and off the form of the third distribution of the form of the details and off the form of the third distribution.

I will by a land or naveaunt

Akapatra, praftapanapatra, tasanapatra and prasadapatra are administrative orders from the king The first document is related with the venerable persons are informed of the rites they have to Perform. A Hamapatra is a document duly signed by the king with seal which contains regulations and orders for the subjects. The fourth one contains the order of the king conferring land, bonour etc. on persons with whose services, valour etc. be is satisfied.

The d to

Some pairakas are bhogpatra (giving right to use) karapatra (giving right to tribute) and upplumpatra (giving rights to Prizent) the last one being of two kinds; giving the right to presents or privileges for generations and for certain stated period only respectively called 'purushāvadhikā and kalāvadhikā." 78

These pairakas may be equated with the modern executive orders and notifications and should not be confused with the laws or ordinances which are executally of a legislative character as the pairakas eppear to be documents containing description of the executive nature.

Provincial Administration Etc.

Sat

tow

It is strange that Jukranist does not discuss the administration of provinces separately. It may be argued that he has no visit state or empire, but by description of Kinds of leaves no room to doubt in this direction not likely that Sukra expects the provincial the model of the central king's administrationally supposed to rule according to the different of diaranteleasteries.

administration is concerned, Sukra — officers—a village or small governed exactly on the model of cse officers are called sahasādiipari ), grāmanetā or grāmpa (headman of village) bhogahāra (the collector of land revenue) lekhaka (Clerk) saulkika (Collector of taxes- tolts, duties etc.) and pratthara (watchmen) 77 Some scholars think that pratthara III a news-bearer III

The Human Factor The experts of public administration take it as a science of the management of public affairs but m has been argued by some humanist thinkers administration remains 'in the final analysis, a human problem . . . the test after all is the human beings and their welfare. 79 Sukra also appears to realize this principle He attempts to build a big organization based on standardized systems and methods but never forgets the human element His advices regarding the service conditions of the employees as well as his sympathy with the aggrieved people against the officers supply ample testimony to bracket Sukra with those thinkers who believe that it is the people who matter and the administrator is not a master but a servant When Sukra asserts that one should never do any thing that is good to the king but is harmful to the people, he appears to support the above view. He categorically declares that the king (source of administration) should serve all people like a servant so

General References

1. Sakrantii, 2 1. 2. Sakrantit, 27-9. 3 Sakrantil, Chap 24-5

Dirock, Marshall E, quoted in Public Administration by Avasthi and Maherwarl, p 9-10

5. Sutranni, 2.213. E Salrantii, 2 421.

7. Sakrantit, 2,118-22. Satrantil, 2 152

9 Sukraegit, 2.119-20.

0 Schrangel, 2 111-12. 1. Sakrantti, 2 111-18.

2 Sat ranges, 2.249 3 Sakrarett, 2.195-205.

4 Sutrantti, 2.54. 5. Selrentt, 2 55-56

& Selrantil, 2.206-7. 7. Salrentt, 2.128-29

8. Arthataura, 2.130-31, 9. dal reneri, 2.132-37.

20 Sul-mary, 2.125-205. 11. Sukranett, 2126

22. dul rentil, 2.131-40 11 Salmontil 2165-66. 4 Sal renett, 2 164,

25. dal. renet, 2.171. 26 dalresm, 2 172. 27. delrant , 2 175.

28 Selventi, 2 174 24 Sel romest, 2.176 25 Salrower, 2.119

21. Salrent 42.196 32. Entrangel, 2 195-205

II detrampt, 2410 14 Estrate 234.44 75, Sub-week, 2 415

26. But renew 2 225 1". dal retert, 2241 62

16. dalmere 2 271 56 Sabrerer, 2.71.5 43 6) falmore, 2.247-44

41 dutrampn, 3,72 23 of village) bhogahara (the collector of land revenue) lekhola (Clerk) saulkika (Collector of taxes- tolts, duties erc) and gratthara (watchmen) 77 Some scholars thick that pratthara is a news hearer 75

The Human Factor

The experts of public administration take it m a science of the management of public affairs but un has been argued by some humanist thinkers administration remains in the final analysis, a human problem . . . the test after all is the buman beings and their welfare "79 Sukra also appears to realize this principle. He attempts to build a big organization based On standardized systems and methods but never forgets the human element. His advices regarding the service conditions of the employees as well as his sympathy with the aggrired people against the officers supply ample testimony to bracket Sukra with those thinkers who believe that it is the people who matter and the administrator is not a master but a servant. When Sukra asserts that one should never do any thing that is good to the king but is harmful to the people, he appears to support the above view, He categorically declares that the king (source of administration) should serve all people like a servant **

44.

Revenue System Sources & Discharges

```
42. Sukranttl, 2 421-26
  43 Sukraniti, 2 435-36
  44 Sukrantii, 2 418-19
  45 Sukraneti, 2 56-57
  46 Sukranits, 2 57-65
  47. Sukranisi, 2 66-69
  48. Sukrantit, 2 418
  49 Sukrantti, 2 395-99.
  50 Sukrangs, 2 399-402
  51 Sukrantti, 2 403
 52 Sukrantil, 2 406-7
 53 Sukrantti, 2 404
 54 Sukrantii, 2,401-2.
 55 Sukraniti, 2 116-17
 56 Sukrantil, 2 249-50
 37 Sukraniil, 1 377-79
 58 Sukrantil, 2 115-16
 59 Sukrantii, 2 207-8
 III Sukranssi, 2 113-15
61
    Sukrangii, 2 108-9
62 Sukrangii, 2 407-9
63 Sakrantii, 2 412
64 Salvaness 2 409-11
65 Subraniii 2413-17
66 Subramiii 121 II h. Sarkara D 100
   Sieha D. P. Readings in Lautilya & Arthaustra p. 54-55
11 Sel - water 2 293-49
69 Sai was 2 109 72
70 Satrange 2 241 42
71 Sitrate : 2 201 294
72 antrango 2 231 297
73 Setrante 2200
To server 2 total 71 See water 2 looks
```

78 January on H. &. Sarkara p. 76.
79 Indian Journal of Pub to Administration, but I bo J. P.

10 deltarge 2 5.5 6 17 deltarge 2 52 22 18 destarge 15 8 6 19 destarge 42 22 11 destarge 42 22

Revenue System: Sources & Discharges

Significance of the Treasure

Treasure has been regarded by Hindu political thinkers as one of the seven limbo of the body politic. In the stray and treasure are considered as root of one another as well so of the state by Sukra. State cannot be protected without surface and army cannot be maintained without treasure. The prosperity army cannot be protected without the properties are stated by treasure, army and absence of the enemies Kautilya, Blostman and Kamandaka sho support the same view!

Significance of the treasure is proved by the fact that all personally the afflars of treasury. Mean asserts that the treasury and realm depend specially on the king 4 Sukra also advises the Ring to supervise the accounts daily and verify it physically (prasyakshas). The king is compared with Kuvera on the ground that the former projects the treasure and possessions of the state in the same way as the latter protects the fewels of the unextene Sukra, it is obvious, deeply realizes the significance of the treasure.

these thinkers, including Sukra, sovice the king to supervise

Characteristics of a good Treasure

Sukra also suggests the amount for a good treasure a king thould endework to create. He advises the king to maintain treasure which may maintain the army for at least twenty years without fines, land revenues and duties. I I, no doubt, appears as a very difficult condution. The king should also collect the grants sufficient to meet the demand of three years, the sadvised to store up those grain that are well developed, bright, best of the species, dry, new and have good colour, smell and taste, durable and deer ones but he should not preserve the rotten ones and sould explace every year by my produce the exact amount of those consumed. Salva

Revenue System: Sources & Discharges

Significance of the Treasure
Treasure has been regarded by Hindu political thinkers as one of the seven limbs of the body politic ¹. The army and treature are considered as root of one another as well as of the state by dura. State cannot be protected without army and army cannot be maintained without creasure. The prosperity of state is led by treasure, army and absence of the enemies? Kauthya, Bhahma and Kamandaka also support the same view."

Significance of the treasure is proved by the fact that all there thinkers, including Sukra, advise the king to supervise personally the affairs of treasury of Manu asserts that the treasury and read depend specially on the king. Sukra all advises the king to supervise the accounts daily and verif it physically (perspublishing). The king is compared with Kuvera on the ground that the former projects the treasur and possessions of the state in the same way as the lattice.

protects the jewels of the universe. Sukra, it is obviou deeply realizes the significance of the treasure.

Cheracteristics of a good Treasure Sukra also suggests the amount for a good treasure a kin should endevour to create. He advises the king to mainta treasure which may maintain the army for at least twen years without fines, land revenues and duties,? It, no dout as a very difficult condution. The king should all grains sufficient to meet the demand of the sadvised to store up those grain that are we bright, best of the species, dry, new and have go our, smell and taste, durable and dear ones but he shot preserve the rotten ones and sould replace every year new produce the exact amount of those consumed. Sul suggests that besides grains other useful things and instruments like medicines, grasses, minerals, woods, arms, weapons, gunpowder, cloth etc., should also be preserved for difficult times."

Besides these physical characteristics, Sukra also mentions the attitudinal characteristics to examine the goodness of the treasure The treasure is classified in two categories; suchada (imparting happiness) and dukhada (causing misery). If the treasure is collected for the maintenance of the army, and subjects and for the performance of sacrifices, it is called one that leads to happiness in this life and bereafter ; the dukhada treasure is made for wife, childern as well as for self enjoyment-it naturally leads to bell and denies happiness in this life un hereafter "

This passage clearly indicates the primary functions of the treasure. It aims at maintenance of army, protection of subjects and the performance of religious celebrations like Yajans The prosperity of the treasure is desired so as to meet the requirements of the emergency situations,

Sources of Treasure

Three regular sources of the income of the treasure have been approved by Hindu Political thinkers, These are (1) king's share in the produce, (2) duties and tolls etc, and (3) punishments Sukra mentions all the three by stating that these should not be augmented in normal times 10 He describes various kinds of fines to be received from the offenders,11 and different forms of taxes and dunes12 in detail.

Among other sources the wealth of the defeated kings and tributes are prominently mentioned It m said that the king is allowed to take away by craft or force or even robbety, wealth from the adharmashil (vicious) king-and also from kingdoms of others. 18 The fourth source is to be exploited only in these of crises when the hing m authorized to take rich men with the promise to return eway.

It is reaarkable that Sukra mentions the sources mostly meationed by the theorists of the public finance in modern limes. The moern economists mention compulsory and voluntary sources as well as sources partly compulsory and partly voluntary. It has been established that various kinds of taxes, fines from offenders, compulsory loans and tributes and indemnities arising out of war or for other reasons; income for the services rendered by the government and public property is called accome from voluntary payments and the third is created through betterment levies and other special assessments, voluntary gifts etc. All these sources include almost all kind of taxes, fines, loans, fees etc, in a modern state but the distinction between them is not clear enough and they mingle with each other?38

Sakra mentions different kinds of taxes which are compulsory and volinating both. Land texenue, duties on goods and their in the profit are essentially of compulsory character; ismularly, inbutts, wealth of the defeated kings, and fines and loans in times of crose come under the same casegory. Similarly, the tax from those who use the streets for the preservation and repair of the same should be classified under the scool category as the is collected against the services rendered by the poverament.]

Sukra, strange enough, does not mention different kinds of voluniary gifs received by the kings which comes under the third entegory. It is to be noted that the author of sukranisi does not live in the modern age and hence could not imagine all the activities and revenue sources of modern state. But he, undoubtedly, mentions the sources—mostly compulsory oese which are remark sources of a modern state also. We do not equate Sukra, therefore, with the modern economist but want to appreciate his understandings of public figures.

The using is classified by Sukra in three categories according to the sources of his treasure. It is staid that one, who, protects has subjects, makes the enomies tributaries and increases the treasure by their wealth is the best (treshtha) king; the madhjama (middle one) increases the treasure by commercial attitudes and practices also and the third is where whose treasure II increased by service and recept free free, hely places and lands consecrated to the god !!

Principles of Taxation That we bring the chief source of revenue has been treprok need discussed by Sukra and some principles could Men wet to drawn out of this discussion.

Silver > his much emphasis on the responsibility of the far and seem the ability of the payer. The king is advised and the same any hardship or sufferings to the tax, paret in and and collecting the taxes. Borrowing freely from lesting area to Sukra applies the simile of garland-weaver thereby that the king, while collecting the tates And and barm the people : the rent is to be realized in the and and the weaver of the garland and not of the coal and not of the coal men hant sets to the woods to make charcoal and thus destroys the A to property but the weaver of the garland plocks from No property those flowers which are fully blown and circs the rest = well as the tree for future use. " The or is sell supported by most of the Hindu thinkers Sales larte in Plain terme that the king should take bie thirt the bearant in such a way that the latter is not ave got a fair remoneration or profit for the work. Sukra ames some rules to qualify this Firstly, the king is advised desire revenue only after ascertaining the amount of produce on the measured plots of land, whether great, middling or tall and then apportion it among them 3° Sukra leaves no bubt at so which agriculture is to be claimed as successful yields a profit twice the expenditure (including government mand) after duly considering the variations in actual ordice; any thing less in regarded as unsatifactory 3° midrily, a thing is to be taxed once and not twice or more. 3° okar is also in favour of imposing taxes on met profits and of on gross income or sale value and the king is advised not realize duly from the seller if he receives less than or just just to the cent. 38° is also to be noted that Sukraniss does not generally favour ly increase in the taxes. The king is forbidden to levy new xes and even the employees of the State are advised not to $8001 new modes of taxes to the king 27. The increase is lowed only when the king is raising an army to face the nemy. He, then, could impose special grants of fines, duties c. and is allowed to take away the wealth of rich men with te promise to return with interest when the danger is over 28 milarly, Sukra appears to support the principles of roportional and sometimes of progressive taxation but he ever supports the regressive taxation. It is to be noted that a x is called proportional, progressive or regressive depending pon whether it takes from high income people, a large action of income or a smaller fraction of income than it kes from low-income people,29 Sukra also says that the ing should realize the taxes taking into the proportion of vestment and profit se He qualifies it by stating the rates f taxes on different minerals; the tax on gold or gems is igher than silver which in its turn, is taxed heavily than opper and so on. It has been plainly admitted that the king hould realize taxes from peasants etc. after noticing the mount of profit.*1 Even the source of strigation and quality f land are to be taken into account in making tax demands. ometimes, Sukra appears to favour the proportional principle;

-401 11

he fixes the rates of taxation on a number of the articles in well as on the moome from interest 123

It is thus quite obvious that Sukra's views regarding tatation are greatly in tune with the spirit of modern principles. The king is authorized to receive tax for the percition begins to the people—no order to support this theory even the tatation titleff is advised to be so formulated by Sukra and other is not to do any harm to the other side—expecially the poor ones. This view is to be compared with that of the medical Europe where the priviledged class was required to pay less or no taxes while the poor and unpriviledged were slivas!

Exemptions from the Taxes

Sukra mentions some conditions in which tax exemption is to be applied. He does not state any case where the total or absolute exemption is favored—only the cows milk etc. and purchase of grains and clothes for domestic purposes in to be freed from taxasion. See

In normal times, the king is advised against levying any sort of taxes on the holy places and the property consecrated to the religious purposet-but he is allowed to receive taxes from the same in the times of danger.²¹

It appears that Sokra favours the idea of total examption for holy or religious property from tareabut, realizing the danger country might face, allows the hang to receive money in times of war or some sort of national calamity. Sokra also favours conditional fax-exemption to be applied as meening to the people with initiative and enterprise. It has been declared: if the people with initiative and enterprise, it has been declared in the people with initiative and enterprise. It has been declared and dig tanks, canals, wells etc. for their good, the king should not demand anything of them until they realize profit (wice the stycenditure.) It is to be noted that Kautilya also favours such ta succeasives for enterprising people.

It is, however, assume that except these two conditions Sukra does not appear to favour any nort of fave-atemption. Many of the authoristics have extempted brahmans (some favour only dones) and the disabled persons and military es from taxation²⁷ but Sukra does not make any mention esc. It simply means that being a pragmatic thinker a does not desire to loose any source that may increase reasure which is the root of the army and the protection e kingdom.

... Polity in Sabrantindra

Tax Proposals

tax has always been the main source of income to the treasure, erally, one-sixth of the produce has been favoured as s share but there has been a difference of opinion rding this among dharmafāstrakāras. Manu, Gautam, tu dharmasutra and the author of manasolias have preferred rent rates of taxes to be imposed on agricultural produce ing from one-sixth to one-twelfth of the total produce,86 rantil frames its own rules regarding the agricultural tax ording to the irrigation facilities with the conditions that peasant should at least get a profit twice the expenditure luding government demend) the king should realize oned, one-fourth- or one-half from the places irrigated ectively by tanks, canals and wells, by rains and by rivers. should receive one-sixth from the barren and rocky soils. allowance of one-twentieth part of the total tax is to be de by the king to the cultivator who gives hundred silver shas or more.40 A royalty from mines is also fixed according he principle of progressive taxation : half of gold, oneed of silver, one-fourth of copper, one-sixth of zink lead tron, half of gems and salts etc. after the expenses bave n met.41

sking is advised to take one-twentieth from the collectors d sellers of grasses and woods etc.42 The tax on cattle is ed as follows: he should have one-eighth of the increase goats, sheep, cows, bufalloes, and horses and one-stateenth the milk of she-bufalloes, she-goats and female sheep and W4 43

en the artisans and artists are required to work for one y in a fortnight without remuneration in lieu of the tax to paid by them. 44

The king is advised to receive as income tax one-thirty second portion of the profit or interest of the usurer as

The land rent from residential and commercial land is also in be received. Some scholars suggest that this rent should be fixed on the same rate as that for cultivation? but this does not appear to be convincing as the rent on agricultural land is decided according to the irrigation source and produce of the land which is not possible in the case of the residential and commercial lands.

and commercial tands.

The king is advised to receive tax for the maintenance and repair of the streets by Sukra in the passage above quoted. Sukra fixes the rate of day fulka) as either one-thirty second portion of the total cost or only the one-tweateth or one sixteenth part of the actual profit accruing from the article to be soid or purchased. The king, however, is advised to exceeve Julka only once. The article that does not produce any profit to the seller is not to be taxed.*

These rules make it obvious that flutze plans to impose taxtietc, only on the profit. He appears to favour the idea of direct taxtution. These rules make clear a point which has aroused a great controversy among the historians regarding the ownership of the land. Sukra's royalty rates from minerals and his imposition of tax as the land not only on agreational but on the commercial and residential ones a well prove it beyond doubt that he favours the idea of the king being owner of the land.

Tex-Collectors

Sukra menuons two officials who appear to be tax-collectors from different sources. The first is bhāgahāra who in advised

(a deed of rent to the cultivator is also suggested to indicate reparately the part of each peasant of the village) and receive it from the rich men in advance or make him a guarantee or periodical installanciat. He is advised to appoint a rydmona—headman of the village—by griving one-suith of iss income from the village to look after its well-being no The httpsha should naturally be linked with this officer. The other official in called Suslituate—one who receives duties. It appears that he should also be responsible for receiving royalities from the manes as no other official for this work is methoard.

At central level, the in-charge minister of this department is colled amatical

Items of Expenditure of the State

Sukra is perhaps the only author who supplies detailed information about the state expenditure. The authors of arthiastra, mahabharata and smitt are generally silent over this issue; only some information about king's expenditure in sometimes given but department-wise estimate of state expenditure has never been given but by Sukra, 43 According to him the state-expenditure is to be stemed in six parts : The king is advised to divide the total income of the state and allocate three parts of at to army, half of at for the charity, half of it should go to the minister (praketi) and will of it for the salaries etc. of employees; the same amount is allocated for the expenses of the king (demabhaga) and one part (one sixth of total income) is to be deposited in the reserve fund so that treasure could always be increasing. It il also seperately stated that the king should appoint grampas by giving one-twelfth of the total income of the concerned village, tor a king having income of one lac karshas per year. Sukra succests that he should distribute his expenditure as detailed below .se

liems	Per month	Per year
(i) Personal wants, contingencies charges etc (ii) Six clerks or acribes (iii) Three councillors (iv) Family	1,500 100 300 300	18,000 1,200 3,600 3,600
(v) Learning and education (vi) Horse and Foot (vii) Elephants etc. & fire arms (viii) Savings	200 4,000 400 1,500	2,400 43 000 4,800 ($,000
Total:	8,300	99 660

(about a Lakh)

It appears that this expenditure is suggested by sukra for small king or one who is feudatory under some other five king. He places the rulers having their annual norm between one lae karshaz to three lae karsha in the grade admenta, even the people who are appointed by the ling i collect revenue of one lac karshas are also similarly designat ed. 65 A comparision of both the budgets strikingly reveal that almost equal emphasis is laid on army expenditure an reserve fund. The first budget keeps fifty percent for the army while the second one allocates forty-eight percent for cavalry and refautry plus about five percent (48% schally) to elephants, fire, arms etc., thus amounting in a total of $2.8 percent of the total income Similarly, 162% of the total income is allocated for reserve fund in the first budget and the second one Leeps its 18 percent for the same purpoit. Sukra has said that treasure is the root of the army and the army is the root of the treasure and this budgetting also supports the significance of the both. Some scholars suggest that a study of the second budget meant for a small kingdom also tells us some remarkable things about the wage-structure of the government employees, se Sukra appears to favour a 1:6 ratio in the remuneration of the employees. Six clerks are to be paid hundred karshas each getting 162 of these per month while the monthly salary of a councillor who to the highest paid employee of the king is one hundred karshar This ratio is not prevalent even in the socialist states today.

It is also to be agreed that percentage of the extense spent on the works of public utility as matter 17 his view highly to be supported by the striking fact that Sukes does not mention, public welfare works no be attended by the Stift One-twelfth part of the first budget to allocated for charify purposes but it must be exentially of a religious nature including some assistance to subolars and writer etc. But no separate mentions of what is called public works department in modern ferminology is anywhere made. It appears that poor and needy people a welf as statistication are to be supported by charity provisions but Sukra's State does not take the responsibility of public works or irrigation facilities etc. on its shoulders. A mention of the construction and maintenance of rest houses (panthasalas) between the two villages under the trusteeship of the gramapas is made by Sukra.18 But it is not clear whether these rest houses were to be constructed and administered by the State, It appears that physical protection and maintenance of dharma are the two primary functions of Sukra's State; hence the budgetory emphasis on army, reserve fund and king himself The expenditure on these three items is 41 portion of the total budget while only 12 portion is to be spent equally on charity and other welfare works as well as ministers (prokritta) and other officials (adhikaris). This proves that although theoretically Sukra's State is held responsible for all the life. activities practically its aim is only protection of the people including punishment to the wicked, a natural corollary of the protection-principle

Maintenance of Accounts: Various types of Income & Expenditure

Sukra, being emphatic on the significance of treasure, discustes the principles of accountancy and book-keeping in detail. He mentions two types of documents, the first containing the descriptions of different administrative and executive nature is called with lekkya and the other type containing the description of accounts mealted 'aya-vyya' lekkya'—document that is related with accounts of income and executive.

Sukra mentions a number of documents of keeping accounts and makes it clear that they are named according to the differences in the amount (great or small), values and measurements. He also defines income and expenditure; the first denotes the bringing under possession gold, cattle, grains etc., annually, monthly or daily and the expenditure the means the gring away of possession of wealth to others.

(a) Types of Incomes

The income is said to be primarily of two kinds; the immediate or new and the old or accumulated (sancisa) The sound income is again classified by Sukra in three categories which in their turn are sub-catogorized. The three catogon of sometim are: (a) that whose proprietary rights in least to belong to others (inclinaparaminka), (b) that shee contents are not known (amilettheyaraminka) and (c) this which is surely one's own (resuscaraminka). The torough one's own (resuscaraminka) and (c) this manner is to be contented to the content of the contented of the content two heads ; the first is normal (sahahka) and the second a adhika. The normal meome is said to be growing figulity by days, months or years, adhila (translated as artificial by some scholars 22) is constituted of the profits of tale, intert, wealth realized by services rendered, rewards, remuneration. wealth conquered etc while snoome from all other sources is called normal. It has been pointed out that the adhikaclus would be what is known as quast-economic receipts of states in modern times ie resenues accruing not from the normal functions of the state as a political organization, but from those of the state as business concern, owner of properly. conitalist etc iii Sukra divides each of both the classes of one's own wealth again in two kinds, the parthija or income coming of land which is again to be designated according to the differto! sources e g . natural waters, artificial waters, villages and cities etc., (this income is also to be divided into different categories according to the division of land and great, top!

fines toyalues on mines, presents and contributions etc.
(b) Typos of Expanditure *1

I spenditure is also classifed and sub-classifed on the similations by Sikta. The expenditure is of two kinds according?

or medium amounts) and the second sub-division is called ITAR or non-territorial income constituted of the dute!

134 The Policy in Schrammara

its purpose; the first is unabhul to (which is enjoyed) and the second rinimaratmaka (which is for exchange of something.)45 Sukra classifies the expenditure under two heads : (i) that which will come back punargerattak and (b) that which destroys the right for ever (swatranirariaka). The punaravrattaka u again sub-divided : hidden underground (nidht) placed with others (upanidht), exchanged (rinimaytkrita), and given to others with or without interest (adhamaenika)

The awatranivariaka-one destroying the right for ever-expenditure is also divided in two kinds : the alhika or worldly disbursement which can also be called secular one and the parlaukika or other-worldly. The secular is sub-divided under five heads ; spent as price of a thing (pritidana), given as reward for valour etc. (partioshika), given as salary etc. (retana) paid for food and other necessaries (bhogya).

The parlaukik or other-worldly expenditure is said to be of countless kinds but four main heads are mentioned by Sukra : that for penances (japa), sacrifices (homa), worship (arcana) and chapty (Dana)

Thus it is clear that income and expenditure both are of two kinds : the dyartaka or returning ones and the nivarit or non-returning ones.

Sukra, like an expert in accounts, analyzes and classifies various kinds of income and expenditure and proves that state-affairs are not possible to be managed without proper understanding of the principles of accountancy. With the difference of nomenclature almost all the type of income and expenditure classified even by modern audit and account experts are likely to come under the heads suggested by Sukra It is to be noted that no Hindu political thinker, except Kautilya, pays so much aftention on the affairs of accountancy as Sakra does. He, however, does not borrow here from Kautilya and exhibits his originality and insight in the theory and practice of accountancy.

Keeping of Account-Books

Sukraniti lays much emphasis on the proper and systematic keeping of account books. The accounts-clerk is advised to note separately the returning and non-returning in and expenditures He should not enter in any trans tegarding purchases, loans, payments etc without writing the account-book. Only then, Sukra opines, there would no cause to dimmution or increase in the amount.4

He also frames comprehensive rules to be followed by countants in book-keepings of which some are to mentioned Sukra is in time with modern practice of makin double entries and of writing income on the left and that o the expenditure on the right side of the account book. He advises first to write the income item and then those related to expenditure Entires regarding the items of same nature are to be made together collectively with all the detailed information Dates etc must be entered to keep a proper record if the nems and entries are great in number, the accountant is advised to make entries according to time, it days, months etc. Sukra says that a complete knowledge of the various types of income and expenditure an well as of the balances could anytime be obtained through proper keeping of the account-books

Sukra has discussed some more things regarding the techni-Ques of keeping accounts which are of no interest in this study But it is quite evident that he has discussed not only the theoretical aspects of the revenue system but the practice of taxation and financial management as well it is remained. able that dukta has classified the kings according to the Venue they fective it means that he attaches much again ance to the economic status of the king. It, therefore, the fical that he goes in so much detail of the affairs of the saury. His understanding and originality of approach ory as well as practice of public finance and finance inistration deserves unteserved appreciation.

General References

41. Sukrantii, 4,2 115-16

```
Sukrangel, 1 61
Sukrantt, 4 2,14-16.
. Kanc. P.V., History of Dharmafattra, Vol III. p 667
. Manu. 4.65.
Sucrantil, 1.276-78,
Sukrangit, 1,76.
Sukrantil, 4,2.13-14.
Sukrantil, 4 2.25-31.
Sukrantil, 4 2 3-4.
Sukrantil, 4 2-9.
Sukrantet, 4 (5)
2. Suk ranget, 4 (2)
Sukrangri, 4.27
Sukrantii, 4 2 11
Andley Sundharam, Public Economics and Public Frnance,
 P. 10-14.
6 Sukrangii, 4.2 127.
7 Sukrantii, 4 2 18-19.
8 Panchiantra 1.243
9. Sukrantit, 4 2 110
O Sukrantil, (B K Sarkar) p. 147
1. Sukrangel, 4 2 109
22. I S Mill quoted in Public Economics And Public Finance P. 33-34
23. Sukrantil, 4 2,108
24 Sukrangii, 4.2 111
25 Sukranert, 4 2 107
26 Sukrangii, 4 2.108
27 Sukranfil, 2 273
28 Sukrantil, 4 2 10-11.
29. Samuelson, Economics, P. 165
30. Sukraneri, 4,2.108
31 Sukrantil, 4 2 116-17
32. Sukrangil, 4 2,117-18 and 126
33. Sukrangit, 4 2.125
34. Sukrantil, 4 2 9
35. Sukranții, 4 2 120
36 Sinha, W. W., Readines in Kautilya's Arthutatra, o. 76-78
37. Altekar, A S , State & Government in Ancient India, p. 267
38 Kane, P.V., History of Dharms #Estras Vol. Ift # 671.
 39 Sukrantil, 4 2.111-113.
 40 Sukrantif, 4.2.114
```

```
42 Salveren, 4.2 117
   41 Jalemin, 8,2111.
   41 Jaleange, 42 118 (119)
  45 Lalemers, 4 2 125.
  46. dal eartif, 4 2 126-27
  47 Juleantif ter El. Sarbarap 149
  41 Salesoft, 42 105-7
  49 Antraogii, 4 2 124.
  Il Saleanti, 2.176
  31. Salrarett, 4 2 104 107
  12. Aftekar, A S . State and Government in Ancient India P-218-29
 53. Sulrantil, 1 316-17
 54 Juleanfri, 4 7 27-29, also eng tr by # K Sarkar P. 219.
 55. Sukramiti, 1 383 ff
 56, Subrantil, (tr B K Sarkar) p 219.
57 Afteler, A S . State & Government on Anciene India, p. 289
58 Sukrantit, 1 269
59 Sukrantil, 2 296
60. Sukrantti, 2 321-23
61. Sukranget, 2 324-35
62. Sukrantti, (ir B K Sarkar) 2 658
63. Sukrantti, (tr # K Sarker) P 94
```

64 Sukrantii, 2 377-49 65. Sukrantii, 2 324 66. Sukrantii 2 350-53. III Sukrantii, 2 372-87

8

Principles and Practice of Justice

Principles and Practice of Justice

Concept of Justice

Administration of Justice (vyavahārā) has been regarded as one of the primary functions of the king or State by Hindu political thinkers including Sukra. The immediate purpose of administering justice is punishment to the wicked men as air destruction, would mean prevention of waked actions; tame the furtherance of the good of the people and their rotestion are achieved? But this is only an instrument in thirving the real aim, i.e. maintenance of dharma. The king, a highest placeful authoring; is supposed to make the subjects of the subjects of the subject in the subject of the subject of the subject in the subject of the su

t that judicial proceeding discriminates the good from the

i furthern there that the real purpose of trucon is maintenance of thermal, by becomes a part of the concept as the root of all the buman as human activation—ten the god according to the Hindu that king a justice is an institute. In the line of the root of the line of the li

as nonnop' Anhed ratios ing's ole law opg wi

1.13

Moses-but eternal and coesal with the Supreme Being, binding on gods and men alike.4

Sukra, like other Hindu philosophers, appears therefore to support a sort of metaphysical-cum-sociological concept at law and justice The real function of vyarahāra is furthersnce of the cause of whole or greater dharma by maintaining the social order and making the people abide their swidharma It is also to be noted that even the court of justice is called dharmadhikaranam by Sukra a court of Justice (dharmadhikaranam) is that place where the study of the social, economic and political interests of men takes place according to the dictates of dharmaiastras Sukra's concept of justice as well as that of other like-minded Hindu thinkers, therefore, appears to be metaphysical in essence and sociological in its practice.

Courts of Justice It has been observed that the king mot mentioned to ad minister the justice but at a later stage in the dharmaidstrat vyarahara becomes 'one of the primary duties of the king Almost all the political philosophers mention king as source of justice? Sukra follows the arthaiastra-smrti tradition and mentions king as the highest judicial authority in the land. But the king, however, is not the only court He is actually the highest appellate authority The same passage reveals that the cases are to be tried successively by kulus (families), frents (corporations), ganas (communities), and then by councillors, and the adhyalsha appointed by the king who himself is higher than all. But it appears that only the kulus, corporations and communities intimately known to the king could investigate the cases

These courts, however, are not authorized to investigate the cuminal cases as revealed through the above quoted passage. They are courts having jurisdiction essentially of civil nature. Who appears that Sukra does not make these courts Marbattful even in civil matters. It masserted that the war are authorized only for dhigdanda (moral hwip his and ragilants social boycott etc.) and vagdanda al chastisment-perhaps bumilating in public etc.), fines corporal pointhments are not within their competence there could only be administered by king himself. In the could only be administered by king himself. In the concluded that the kulas, irems and game are not competent to administer archadinala and hindinglat in Sukra's opinion as they are held inferior in each hierarchy to the counciliors Sukra, perhaps, pays the respect to the authority of the State and does not risgs any tharm of its power by any non-political body by the king, therefore, the chief-justice appointed by him has absence could administer the financial or physical nishments and the other courts are left with moral or instruments only.

W The Part Frantisara

ne King as Supreme Justice

all king, according to Sukra, is the supreme seat of justice dis advised to look personally into the juridical matters cordings to the dharmatatres. It has a sutherized to appoint her qualified judicial officers-the pradvisah and councillors justy—as well ministerial staff required for judicial administration to assist and substitute him in this absence.

he king, though supreme justice, is advise, however, never give any decision without consulting the jury etc. He is upposed to look after law suits in the company of the chieflatice, amatira, brahman, and priest as well as the jury, his therwise action is said to be leading towards hell and estruction.¹³ le is advised to refrain from looking personally into and huma any decisive opinion in certain case, i.e., disputes imong brahman regarding the interpretation of a procedure of hareficial nutual, there ares of ascetizes (there are two be investigated by the experts in the vedas) and the disputes arising among the practitioners of occult aris. It is obvious that Sukra does not want to make the hung interfere with religious or thososphesia matters; he appears also to be a believer in occult practices as he advises the hung not to decide the caves of occulinates for fear of exciting their anger.

Principles and Practice of Justice 143

Judicial Officers: Their Functions and Qualifications

In the absence of the king, the pradicable is supposed to perform the function of justice. His functions and qualificates have been discussed with those of the other conscious minuters of the king. Analya and purchina are also mentioned among the persons whom the king or the chiefjusted advised to consult with.

Sukra mentions ten requisites for the administration of justice . the king, the officer (adh) ksha), the jury (sabh)sh amptifistra, accountant, clerk, gold, fire, water and purutha The gold and fire are meant for the swearing of the oath Water for the thirsty and the nervous and purusha to abey the commands of king or adhyaksha etc. Smrti is kept to be consulted with. It is said that the king is the judge, the adhyaksha is the speaker and the members of jury are inv. estigators 10 The king, if not able to attend the administration of justice, is advised to appoint brahmans 'who are well-versed in vedas, self-controlled, high-born, impartial, unagitated and calm, and who fear next life, are religious-minded, active and devoid of anger. Only in the absence of brahmanas, he is advised to appoint a deserving kshtriya or Vaifya who is well-versed in dharmajastra. But a sudra is never to be appointed as judge 16

Sukra also describes the qualities desired in members of july They are required to be 'expert in the practice of yarahati and conversant with actions, character and attribute of people, impartial to both enemies and friends, knowr of dharma and truthful, not idle, masters over anger, passions and greed and sweet-tongued's. They should be well-irrid and virtuous and possess the capacity of bearing the burden of the administration of justice like bulls. 'Y Sukra states that a judicial officer should be well-versed not so one discipline only as he would not be able to anvestigate a case properly; the king should, therefore, appoint men who are well-coversant with many fastrax. The greatest qualification, however, is the spiritual-mindedness-as his opinion acquires states of dharma.'

144 The Polity in Sukranitisara

qualifications for the accountant and the clerk are also cribed. They are supposed to be 'well-versed in lexicon the significance of words, well up in accounts, honest, framed in the use of various alphabets. 28

a datassion should make it clear that Sukra gives much lito appitual bentof mind, a knowledge of statez includyworkare and imparitality and passionlessness as well it to be noted that virtuous pressons are always welcome the court even as undercoa according to Sukra. Even the days who are sudicions should be made hearers. The who knows dharma should speak truthfully without in considering whether he is appointed or unappointed as who, after going in an assemblage, does not speak truth treams siled in a called a sinner by Sukra *1 in makes this ar that the virtuous and knowers of dharma are always ited in Sukra's, court to help in the administration of title. Their presence works not only as a check on the buttarness of the judge and yury but as an assistance—metimes guidance—in the judicial process. anu and Narada also tend to support the view that silence a knower in the court is a sin # A modern high court der creant's that 'is was the rule of the day that every trion versed in law should sitend the court and, of occasion one should be invited to give his opicion on a disputed onit of law to prevent obvoics miscarriage of justice'; he to compares this procedure to the modern practice of siling upon a lawyer not engaged in the case to assist the ourt as amicus curale, a firend of the court. This, therefore, hould not be taken as a freedom to every one to participate.

n the litigation.²² Judicial Procedure

The procedure of the administration of justice in divided into our sugges: the purpopts (statement of plainit) or stdl), the utural (reply) of the defendant or pratitad), the kripa (conduction and progress of the sun) and the airmays (decliion or judgement) if this procedure 'anxietyres almost all the ideas which we now trace as products of the British legal history and call modern. 2"

Puravapaksa

Sukratii gives a vivid picture of the proceedings at courts. The king is asked to enter the court with modesty as well as dignity with his judicial assistants and so take the sated justice. The actual work starts only after his taking the sait. The planning, then, is asked to go to him to present his case in writing with modesty and respect—bowing low and folding his hands with submission. The king is saked to conjob and hear him. The plannintly statement is to be written down in prevalent script—any distortion in the statement by the clerk is regarded as theft by Sukra, and the gully is to be punished likewise. In the absence of the king, the highest Officer appointed by him will take his set II.

It is remarkable that offences are divided into two kinds from the point of view of cognizance like the modern practice. It appears that Sukra does not favour the initiation of a civil suit by the king himself or his officers # That means that civil suits are regarded non-congnizable offences. For such litigation some one aggreeved and not inspired, or bired by the king should make complaint But the king is authorized to start a case after receiving information about some cognizable offences through official or non-official source. These sources are stobhaka (who informs the king about any of fifty chhalas-misdemeanour-and other offences for the sake of money) and sucaka who is appointed by the king to inform the latter of others' offences,27 The cognizable offences include fifty kinds of discourtesies shown to a king, the kinds of felonies or aparadias and twenty-two offences against the state,2#

Sukra suggests that the person working on the seat of jutter should make some investigation of the deedma or plant and the statement made by the plantiff in his presence. The king is advised to punish the officers who without investigating the statement of plantiff take cognizance of the officer and issure in to the defendant (prantid) 20 photodence.

A peculiar sanction has been observed by sch obedience to summons menforced according lity in Sukramitisara

pikaraste: four kinds of avedias or legal detailers . . . the Thousand local harporary 14-15-00 - 1 (= 10,0pm)23 angealls of nature or barsh words or cruck speciment ble to be punished.42

ond stage of a law-suit is utilize or defendent's very out. erred that the reply of the defendent should be weren presence of the plaintiff, a should cover the whole care ligible manuet. A vague, doubtful, too Lede er 250 and partial reply is not to be admitted by the comme reing the tradition of the Hindu administrative he . 112.2 tom four types of reply—sémusion, écual, sémusica printestion (pratyaraskandma) and girraristeria malicate or plea of a former julgmental Killeren thespate and other smertikeres follow the same tolliers tese four stages remind one of the most edverted forms of leading recognized in the modern times. 94

t is to be noted that the statement of the two perties are to be received in presence of each other and the efficies who do not follow this are considered possibable the theres " This proves that Sukra is keen to make the people feel the honoury and impariality of justice,

Rules of Trial or Kriya

In the absence of admission from the side of defections, the case enters the third stage called knyg in which the resignation and the opposite party are required to establish there care. Here it is also suggested that the cases mormally should be thed in the order of arrival but sometimes on account of the importance of some case or its gravity etc. the court is authorized to change the order."

Sakra has elaborately discussed the complex problem of the burden of proof. He advises the court to assess the vacantees of both the parties and to give its opinion with regard to the party on whom lies the burden of proof. The required sarry to be asked to formula all necessary evidence, commerced

Puravapaksa

Sukrantit given a wird picture of the proceedings at court. The king in asked to enter the court with modely as well as dignity with his judicial assistants and to take the text of justice. The actual work starts only after his taking the sait The plaintift, then, is asked to go to him to present his cas in writing with modesty and respect—bowing low and folding his hands with submission. The king is asked to conside and hear him. The plaintiff's atatement as to be written down in prevalent script—any distortion in the statement by the clerk is regarded as their by sukes, and the guilty to be punished likewise. In the absence of the king, the highest Officer appointed by him will take his seat.³⁵

It is remarkable that offences are divided into two kinds from the point of view of cognizance like the modern practice. It appears that Sukra does not favour the initiation of a civil suit by the king himself or his officers 20 That means that civil suits are regarded non-congnizable offences. For such litigation some one aggrieved and not inspired, or hired by the king should make complaint But the king is authorized to start a case after receiving information about some cognizable offences through official or non-official source These sources are stobhaka (who informs the king about any of fifty chhalas-misdemeanour-and other offences for the sake of money) and sacaka who is appointed by the king to inform the latter of others' offences,27 The cognizable offences include fifty kinds of discourtesies shown to a king, the kinds of felonies or aparadhas and twenty-two offences against the atate.28

Sukra suggests that the person working on the seat of justice abould make some pressingation of the dwedown or plaint and the statement made by the plaintiff in his presence. The king is advised to punish the officers who without suveringating the statement of plaintiff take cognizance of issue summons to the defendant ( to the summons is regarded == fined by Sukra. A pecus scholars by which to many smylikaras: four kinds of asedhazor legal detentions bave been suggested by Sukra also. These are local, temporary inhibition from going abroad and prevention from occupation but the man who goes beyond the judiceious limit of asedha by teatraining calls of nature or harsh words or cruel treatment is also lable to be punished.³ is also lable to be punished.³ is also lable to be punished.³

Uttera

The second stage of a law-suit is utilized or defendent's version. It is asserted that the reply of the defendent should be written in the presence of the plantifit, it should cover the whole case in intelligable manner. A vague, doubtful, too little or too much and partial reply is not to be admitted by the court.⁸² Following the tradition of the Hindu administrative law, Sukra meations four types of reply—admission, denial, admission with justification (prayrayexinding) and partial prayrayexinding (res judicets or plea of a former judgement.⁸⁸ Käysyan, Bhasspain and other amritakes follow the same tradition.

It is to be noted that the statement of the two parties are to be received in pressure of each other and the officers who do not follow this are considered punishable itie therees This Proves that Sukra is keen to make the people feel the honesty and impartiality of justice.

These four stages remind one of the most advanced forms of pleading recognized in the modern times, at

Rules of Trial or Kriya

In the absence of admission from the side of defendant, the case enters the third stage called krys an whoth the planniff and the opposite party are required to establish their case Here it, a slice suggested that the cases normally should be tried in the order of servated but sometimes on account of the importance of some case or its gravity etc, the court is authorized to change the order.

Sukra has elaborately discussed the complex problem of the burden of proof. He advoses the court to anazes the statements of both the patters and to give its opision with regard to the party on whom lies the burden of proof. The required party is to "o formak all necessary exidence, documentary

Puravapaksa

Sukraniti gives a vivid picture of the proceedings i justice. The actual work starts only after his taking The plaintiff, then, is asked to go to him to present in writing with modesty and respect-bowing low a 114 The Both on 6 to ...

dignity with his judicial assistants and to take the

The king asked to enter the court with modesty a ing his hands with submission. The king ill asked to and hear him. The plaintiff's statement is to be down in prevalent script-any distortion in the sta by the clerk is regarded as theft by Sukra, and the g to be punished likewise. In the absence of the kin highest Officer appointed by him will take his sent.25 It is remarkable that offences are divided into two from the point of view of cognizance like the modein pra It appears that Sukra does not favour the initiation of a suit by the king himself or his officers 26 That means civil suits are regarded non-congnizable offences, For litigation some one aggrieved and not inspired, or hired the king should make complaint But the king is author m start a case after receiving information about tome co zable offences through official or non-official source. The sources are stobhaka (who informs the king about any of it chhalas-misdemeanour-and other offences for the sake raoney) and sacaka who is appointed by the king to info the fatter of others' offences, 27 The cognizable offence include fifty kinds of discourtesies shown to a king, the kin of felonies or sparadhas and twenty-two offences against the Sukra suggests that the person working on the seat of justic should make some investigation of the aredana or plaint and the statement made by the plaintiff in his presence. The king n advised to punish the officers who without investigating the statement of plaintiff take cognizance of the offence and issue summons to the defendant (prativadi) 20 Disobedience to the summons is regarded as a high offence to be heavily fined by Sukra A peculiar sanction has been observed by scholars by which obedience to summons is enforced according to many amplikknath. Jour kinds of archharor legal detentions have been suggested by Sukra also. These are local, temporary inhibition from going abroad and pervention from occupation but the man who goes beyond the judicious limit of ascalha by restraining calls of nature or barash words on cruel treatment in also fable to be plannished?

Uttara

The second stage of a law-suit is utign or defendent's version it is ascreted that the reply of the defendent should be written in the presence of the planning, it should cover the whole case in intelligible manner. A vague, doubtful, too little or too much and partial reply is not to be admitted by the court ¹⁶

Following the tradition of the Hindu administrative law, Sukra menions four types of reply—admission, denial, admission with justification (prespress, beadmand) and phrampopyaridit (res judiciae or plea of a former judgement ¹⁸ Kätyayan, Brhaspati and other smytificar's follow the same tradition. These four tages remaind one of the most advanced forms of pleading recommed in the modern times. ¹⁸

It is in he noted that the statement of the two parties are to be received in presence of each other and the officers who do not follow this are considered punishable like threves. This proves that Sukra is keen to make the people feel the honesty and impartishty of inside.

Rules of Trial or Kniya

In the absence of admission from the side of defendant, the case enters the third stage called dryp an which the plannts and the opposite party are required to establish their case. Here it is also stagested that the cases normally should be tried in the order of arrival but sometimes on account of the importance of some case or its gravity etc. the court is substituted to chanke the order. **

Sukra has elaborately discussed the complex problem of the burden of proof "He advises the court to assess the sistement of both the parties and to give its opinion with regard to the party on whom lies the burden of proof. The required part; is to be agiled to furpish all necessary evidence, documentar or otherwise, at his command. Sukra wa from one of the two sides is essentially the reply comes under the res judicale ca would be required to present the evidenc Owing to some unavoidable and justifiable of the burden of proof from the one to the Sukra makes much efforts in order to elelevidence as the decision of the case prima the truthfulness of the evidence. The cycle primarily of two kinds human or divine kinds. The human or manusha evidence under three heads. documentary, possess witness. 32 **

147

The documentary evidence is again describer royal and popular Both of these kinds a with one's own hand or by others and bears mitnesses or without the same. They are to judged according to the local practice. 9 I that the documents of partition(with the applits, asie and purchase etc. are to be counded if approved by receivers and witnessed by w.

amilar officers. A document should mentimonth, fortught, with, province, district, platage, the objects, the evidences, the goods, the own name, and the king's name, residence, other parry, names of ameetors, the griefs the the giver and the signs of the mercy ett with considered than or savid. The documents with expiration of the period of transaction are not as those which have been written by senseless pe and by force, "! Bhongs or Possession

Possession is evidence of inte. Sukra also fram prescription by which a wrongful possessor for semore with the knowledge of the owner gets a title of the rights of the latter. But the possession giving rise to a presumption of title, which was later to be developed by modern jurisprudence But the possession of the following does not amount to prescription mortgage, boundary land, minor's property, trust property, sealed deposit of female slaves and government property of learned frotriya.43 Witness A detailed discussion has been presented by Sukra regarding the reliability of the witness A witness is trustworthy only if he has seen or heard the facts in the presence of the plaintiff and the defendant. He should not have a defective intelligence, memory and ears and should possess a tested truthfulness, Sukra accepts as a reliable witness only one man who is documentary proof.42 Sukra here appears to agree with Yamavalkya Possession, however, II taken as an evidence virtuous and approved by both the parties.44 Sukra says that house-holders (not the dependents), wise men, those who are not abroad, and young men should be made witnesses. He recommends the appointment of females as witnesses when female interests are involved 43

Partiality in judgement is said to be caused by five things: passion, cupidity, fear, malice and information in secret from the parties. The king and the members of jury, therefore, are advised against singly trying the cases or hearing the parties.¹⁸ He should, after hearing the plaintiff and defendant both, consult the jury before giving any judgement. It anticipate the modern jurideal practice of the trial of the cases in public and consultation with jury.

The king as justice or his substitute is supposed to decide the disputes according to the dictates of the idiamentaturas but he, simultaneously, is advised to respect the local customs which are to be taken as more binding where a dispute between the two ariset, Those whose customs show been received by traditions and were practised by their ancestors are not to be condemned for following those customs, not olbers. A renowned jurist, commenting upon this principle, italies: ancient Hinda jurists seem to recognize that if there is a conflict between the practice prevailing in the community and the letter of the law found in the impris or traits, it is generally the practice that would prevail. And Sukra undesitatingly approves of this view and thus proves limited? a progressive birsts!

The king's discretion as understood to be the final means to deed cases where there is no document, no passession, no wintes and no resorting to ordeals. Sakra, morever, detaires that, 'in cases which are impossible to decide finally and which are of a doubful character, e.g. those relating to boundaries etc., the king is at liberity to proceed as he is the upprise lord (prablu) **

There are six kinds of judgements as described by Surkra: the same are through evidence, reason, usages, oaths, special orders of the king and the admission by the planniff #W yeaunitions eight kinds as he counts three types of evidence Fightately. Pidmaha also agrees with Sukra that the king's order is the judgement where human and divince evidences fait

Sakra, like other Hindu jurists, empowers the king or court to issue a decree as judgement at the end of the trial after

be done in the presence of both th would be allowed to opt for not go the case of differences in var and in coughty the view of th Sukra is not in favour of deonly one type of evidence-1 witness. He sees all the post in all kinds of witnesses and consider all types of human judgement. In case any of the ing ones should be made a.

however, all the types of hur court is advised to employ opposite party to fair), juter and dryme test successively. 42 S ang divine tests in ordinary cain the cases of grave nature dence is available 49 He. more should not be applied in case

corned narray only the demands

Rules of Summons

Sukra, while describing the functioning of the court, has framed definite rules for some associated miscellaneous problems. The court is empowered to call any body if needed m the progress of the case. But Sukra lays down certain conditions which check the court from summoning every body in the court. According to him the persons going to marry, the sickly ones, persons just going to perform any sterifices, persons who are accused in other cases, persons engaged in governmental work, cowherds tending the cattle, peasants in harvest season, artists and artisans at their work, soldiers engaged in war, minors, messengers, persons engaged in some charitable work and men in danger are not to be summoned at once. If someone fails to reach the court due to some unavoidable physical circumstances, the king is advised not to punish him. The king is advised not to summon the diseased man but he could be called by conveyances in some important cases. He should summon those who have retired to the forest only when necessary by conveyances with great respect 71

Sukra is not generally in favour of calling women to the court. He mentions a number of women who are not to be summoned, the young maids without relatives, high-class ladies, women in the lying-in room in delivery period, high caste girls and women whose masters are not unknown.72 It implies that the court should go to them if necessary This practice is still followed in some cases if the concerned party pays the visiting fees to the court. But the women who are earning on their own, prostitutes, those who have no families and the degraded women could be summoned to the court

Rules for Pleaders

There has been a controversy over the existence of pleaders in Hindu judicial system. Some historians are of the opinion that pleaders rarely figure in ancient Indian judicial system?". We do not provoke here this controversy but Sukra, however, mentions pleaders working for some men and receiving fees from them. He states in no vague terms that representatives or agents could be appointed by persons who do not know the legal procedure, or who are busy elsewhere or who are not good speakers, who are foolish, mad and old. Females, children and the diseased could also appoint pleaders called nipogitas who may be experts in legal procedures or are near relatives or friends of the party. But it is asserted that the representative's action should be deemed as that of the real party and it could in no case be undone. 70 This reminds one of modern practice.

Sukra also recommends the fees to be paid to the pleaders. He should be paid one-sixteenth, one-twentieth, one-tenth. one-fifty or its half of the worth of the suit according to the importance of the same. The total fee is required to be distributed among all the pleaders in case their number exceeds one The pleader who demands more than this in likely to be punished Similarly, the pleader is again liable to the punishment if he, for any temptation, deceives his client.

In certain cases, the defendants are not allowed to be represented by pleaders and are asked to attend the court in person Sukra says that 'in the cases of murder, thieving, adultery, taking forbidden food, abduction, harshness, forgery, sedition and sobbery there are to be no lawyers Mi representatives (of the defendants) The perpetrators are to answer personally. He advises the king to punish the man who does not respond to summons without any justified cause and only owing to the vanity of his men and money." Thus, it is evident that sukramed has discussed in detail not only the judicial procedure as court but the other related rufer also Sukra, throughout this discussion, emerges as & practical and liberal jurist-with some exceptions, of course.

Criminal Law The Liberal Views

This liberal attitude of Sukra prevails in his consideration of criminal cases also. He dies not appear to believe in the theory of severe punishments for trivial offences. He realizes the signifiance of the king being a deelathara as it is only through frat of dayle that people become virtuous." The hine, therefore, should believe in the principle that execution of bad men is real ahuma.77 He, however, should not be the the one of the distribution of the bad o

Sukra classifies the offences in four categories through the body, through speech, through mind and through association and each is committed either intentionally or innocently. Each offence is again of two kinds the committed and the instigated and each of both have four types temporary, contant, tabibitual and natural 77

The offenders, offences and punishments are divided each in three kinds : uttama, madhyama and adhama Every offender is first to be categorized according to his family, qualities and wealth and punishment is to be administered accordingly in the light of the kind of offence he commits. It is to be noted that uttama offender to be only lightly rebuked for the adhama or madhyama offences and is to be fined for the uttama offence if any of these is committed for the first time. The danda increases according to the frequency of the offence resulting finally in impresonment. The second class offenders are to be fined moderately-and the latter is fined half the amount then that of the former-for the first offences according to the category of the offence. The punishment here also increases according to the frequency of the crime,30 This rule, however, does not hold good for the offences like murder etc.

It is remarkable that dukta mostly favours fines and even unprisonment is imposed only if the offence is committed regularly. This clearly implies that Sukra is not in favour tegularly. This clearly implies that the sukra is not in favour properly punishment, the appears to be a believer in the principle that punishment should be reformatory and not a find of taking vengeance. That is why he strettly disapproves of capital punishments except the cases of railpitch as "A large number of grave offenders are to be excled only but the bose relatives of the offenders should not be harmed 4"

his makes it clear that Sukra being a practical as well as beral thinker does not approve of severe punishments as the State, accorning to him, in likely to be ruined through punishment and partition of one's own subjects " One should always bear in mind the maxim that : The king in always deserted by good people and acquires sizes by always not punishing those who ought to be punished, and punishing those who ought not, and by being a severe punisher.'s

Sukra appears to be a believer in the doctrine of equality before law. No body is exempted from punishment if he ii an offender. It has been assertively stated that even the preceptors who are proud, do not know their duties and go astray must be punished by the king." We have seen in the preceding section of this chapter how even the judicial officers are to be punished if found working contrary to the law, It would, naturally be an exaggeration to conclude that the author of sukraniti is every inch a modern jurist but in all fairness this should not be denied that he anticipates many of the modern juridical tendencies. To conclude with the words of a renowned modern jurist, "A truly magnificient administration of justice synchronizing the highest principles with the fairest procedure, in the contribution of the Hindu judicial system in India 97 And the system graphically pictured in fukrantil should very well serve as one of the best examples

General References

- 1. Sukrantil, 4.5 1-3
- 2. Sukrantit, 1,23-25.
- 3. Sukrantil, 4.5.4
- Sen Gupta, N.C., in Studies in Cultural History of India, P. 63.
 dukrontil, 4 5 42.
- 6 Sen Gupta, la Studies in Cultural History of India., P III.
 7. Kane, P V., History of Dharmafestras, Vol. III. P 703
- Sukrantii, 4.5.30-31.

 9. Sukrantii, 4.5.29.
- 10. Sukrantil, 4 5.274.
- 11. Sukrantit, 4 5.11
- 12. Sukrantif, 4 5.13,41,61.
- 13. Sukrantit, 4 5 5,10.
- 14 Sukrantti, 4.5.36-40.
- 15. Sukrantii, 4 5.13-14.
- 16. Sukranett, 4.5 16-17.
- 17 Sukrantti, 4 5.24
- 18. Sukrantti, 4.5.33-34.
- 19. Sukrentti, 4.5.153.
- 20 Sukrantii, 4.5.153.
- Narada, Introduction 3.10 and also Manu, 8.13.
 Mukharii, P.B., The Cultural Heritage of India, Vol. 11, P 436.
- 2). Sakrantii, 4.5 153.
- 21 Mukharji, P.B., The Cultural Heritage of India, Vol. 11. II 438 25. Sakranti, 4 5.56-60.
- 25. Sukrantii, 4 5.36-60. 26. Sukrantii, 4 5.63
- 27. Sukrenge, 4.5 67-70.
- $1 Sukranesi, 4 5 70-86.
- Sukrangii, 4.5 90-91.
 Mukharji, P.B., The Cultural Heritage of Iodia, Vo. II, p. 443
- 31. Sakeantri 4.5 95-97.
- 32, Satranert, 4.5.140.
- Juliany, 4.5,144-45.
 Mukhary, P.R., The Cultural Heritage of India., Vol. 11., P 444.
- 21. Intrance, 4.5 151.
- 36. dukrengt, 4 5.155-36. 37. dukrengt, 4.5.158-60
- 31. Intrance, 4 5.160-61.
- 39. Subrameri, 4 5.161-67.
 - 41. Satreett, 4.5.176-81.
 - 42, Sahrentri, 4 5,319-22.

r ,

```
43. Sukraniti, 4,5,223.
   44 Cukrantii 4 5 183-85
   45. Sukrantti, 4 5 187.
   46. Sukrantti, 4 5 189-92.
   47 Sukrantti, 4 5 188
   48. Sukrantii, 4 5 198-200
   49. Sukrantti, 4 5 192-94.
   50. Sukrantit, 4 5,195
   51. Sukrantti, 4 5 209-11
   52. Sukraniti, 4 5 225-26
  53. Sukrantti, 4 5 250-51
  54. Sukrantti, 4 5 247-51
  55 Sukrantii, 4 5 257
  56. Sukrantti, 4.5 263.
  57 Sukrantti, 4 5 264.
  58 Apasiamba, 2 5 11 2
  59 Sukrantti, 4 5 6-8
  W Sukrantil, 4 5,49-50
  61. Gajendragadkar, P.B., The Cultural Herstage of India, Vol. II., P 426.
 62 Sukrantti, 4 5 266-67
 63 Sukrantii, 4 5,265
 Kane, P.V. History of Dharms fastras, Vot III . P 757
 65. Sukraniti, 4 5 280.
 66 Sukrantti 4 5 281
 67 Sukrangti, 2 300-1.
 68 Kann . P V., History of Dharmattetres, Vol. III . P 758
 69. Aukeantti. 4 5 275-76
10. Sukrangil, 4.5 277-78.
71. Sukrantil, 4 5 102-7.
72. Sukrantti, 4 5,101.
73 Altekar, A.S., State and Government in Ancient India, P 258
74. Sukrantil, 4 5 108-11.
75. Sukrantil, 4 5 119-21
76. Sukrantri, 4 1 45-49.
77. Sukranset, 4.1.52
78. Sukrantil, 4.1 65-66
79 Sukranitt, 4 1.63-70
```

Art of War and Military System

43. Sukrantit, 4.5 44. Sukrantit, 45 45. Sukrantti, 45 46 Sukraniti, 45 47. Sukrantti, 45 48. Sukrantti, 4 ? 49. Sukrantti, 4 50. Sukransti, 4 51. Sukrantti, 4 52. Sukraniti. 4 53. Sukrantti, 4 54 Sukrantti, 4 55. Sukrantti, 4 56. Sukrantit. . 57 Sukrantti, 58 Apasigmbr 59 Sukrantti. 50 Sukransit, 61. Gajendra P. 426 62. Sukrantti 63. Sukrantii 64 Kane, P. as Sukranti 65 Sukrant 67. Sukrant KR KADO. 69. Sukrant 70 Sukrani 71 Sukran 72. Sukran 73. Alteka 14 Sutrar 75. Sukrai 76 Sukra 77. Sutra 78. Sakra 79 Setre 80 Sutn Il Sutr 82. Sutr 83. Sut,

Art of War and Military System

the siste. This is actually root of the state without which protection of the people—the foremost duty of the king—is non-possible to be schewed. Army and treasure have been called too of the each other by Sukra and it is asserted that it is maintained the simple of the minimization of the simple of the simple of the property and the enemy is destroyed. Sukra mentions strength of army as one of the six bases strength sitteringth of the Significance of Army

Army has been mentioned as one of the seven elements of body, strength of valour and prowest, strength of the army strength of arma, strength of untelligence and strength cife) and claims that without the army no one can overpowe win an uniganficant occupy. The people are likely to become tools of one who has steength and become one's enemy, whi is weak and this holds more true in the case of the long. Thing is, therefore, advised by Sakera to ministian is formidable army as it is the chief means of defenting the enemy as without which there is neither kingdom, nor wealth, and prowests. Summach mentions army not as a separate part of the state but as a subpart of treasure but other political thinks including Kautilya, Sakra and others take it as one of it lumbs of the body politic. It is significant to the companion of the body politic. It is significant to be peared to maintain the army.

of Army

does not mention freet and amitte leaves freel only.* om different points of view-each tim

ities mention six types of army i moult amitra and arrika Kautilya, Kamandaki agreed to this classification. Bi We categories It either belongs to oneself (516/36) or to allies (mattra), from the point of view of recruitment it is her standing army of the state (manta) or a newly recruited e (adyaska) Similarly, it is either trained or untrained, Recred by the state or not officered by the state; equipped Whe state with arms, or supplying their own arms and mmunitions etc. and with their own vehicles or supplied with vehicles by the state. These are respectively called ikitida alikitia, gulmibhita or agulmaka, dartastra-snasatresta and Swavshr-duttavshona, The gulnubhiita is also called Arragulma and the agulma is swayangulma. Sukra mentoas a separate category called dranyakas—an army recruited of forest tribes—which is named staw or startika in Kautilya and others.

Analyzing all these types and sub-types of army some scholars tend to conclude that mainly two kinds of recruitment are described in Sukranin. The army of the state seems to have been divided into two classes (i) the standing army which must have been trained, regimented or officered or manuel by the Military Department of the State, and supplied with weapons and conveyances at state expenses, (2) the national army of the volunteers or the military which must necessarily be of raw recruits, untrained, unregimented (i.e. having their own commanders) and responsible for their own arms, accountements, and conveyances. It would thus appear that the ments army to that which as connected with the that are through roots, or from the beginning would corepond to the permanent standing army of the Lingdom, and the sadyesks or new army improvised for the occasisons and the survivies and the survivies of the national militia enlisted by the methods of contetipling

This conclusion, however, seems to have been drawn in i This concerns to have open grawn in mood of over-simplification. It is to be noted that conscription mood of the mentioned by Hindu political thinkers. Similarly is no wave we for granted that addyaska army is not to l we cannot supplied with necessary arms, vehicles and oth paid or supplies. The other authorities mention bhita, bitta accounteness such to the place of sadyari or bhft) a (all meaning past ones) in the place of sadyari in Suktanitisära

It is more probable that the manula means the army constituted of the persons belonging traditionally to warrior families serving the state while the manyarka are the newly recruited ones, It has been mentioned that the persons whose for fathers had been awarded tax-free land-plots for their military services were, according to the authorities, members of the manula army. It appears to be more correct that four has classified the army separately from points of view of recruitmistic command, accountement, while and training etc.——each time in two groups

One more classification according to the nature of movement is also attempted by Sukra From this point of view the army if again of two kinds (1) awagama (that which moves without any help—infantry being only of this kind) and any agama (that which proceeds in wehicles—the three kinds of which are chariots, horses and elephants).*

dukra also mentions barriebale as an army constituted of the troops left by, or captured from the energy and placed among one's own people but both of these kinds of latrabales are saided from much use and should be regarded as simulated is a spinars that sukra has employed the term farrabale for the army mentioned as ambrabale by other authorius. Similarly, from the viewpoint of usefulness the army is called sara or autra-1.

Sukra's classification of the army, thus appears to be comprehense as well as systematic. It is attempted from point of view of owaership, direction, recruitment, accourment and usefulness. This should naturally be clear that an army classified positively bunder all these heads is real strength of the state which reduces successively through each trigative classification. Sukra, therefore, gavisses the tagg to appoint the untrained, inefficient and the new recruite to other lasks than actual warfare I

Elements or division of Army

The Hindu army traditionally consisted of four parts— Chariotry, Elephantry, Cavalry and Infantry. Some of the authorities mentions six and sometimes even eight parts to but not the main part of the army. Subrantit, following the age-old tradition, mentions four-fold army consisted of inflantry, chariotry, elephantry and cavality—the first it called awagama while the remaining three are awagama? It is strange that Subrantit took so not mention may 8s a septiate part which it is supposed to do having in view the probable date of its compilation as the Chola dynasty who in the beginning of the second mulleanum of Christ had cressed the sea and had a powerful navy as a significant part of their Army.

the remaining two-mantra and kosha-or remaining four (porters, boats, spies and guides) are actually accessories and sea and had a powerful may as a significant part of their army.

Besides these four divisions, Sukra suggests to have carrell, bulls and cannons also. He advises that the army should have a predominance of footsoldiers, a medium number of horses, a small account of elephants with equal number of bulls and carnels but elephants never the excess. He should decides the ratio of each part by stating that the king should have a predominance of footsoldiers, a medium number of horse, a small account of elephants with equal number of bulls and camels but elephants never in excess. He also decides the ratio of each part by storing that the king should have his infantry fouritmes the cavalry, bulls one sixther his horser, camels one eighth and elephants one-fourth of ramidchariots one-half of the elephants and cannons time the chariots. The preference to camels and bulls over elephants indicates that the author of inkrantic enter lived in or wis familiar with the place where elephants, chariots and even cannon were of texer utility than bulls and camel. He remarkably mentions characteristics of good and bad button elephants, camels and bulls and their different races with kerdetails and authenticity and describes the ways of training

the same 17

The intelligence increases through intercourse with people learned in Sastras. Sukra finally comments that the strength of the state (made possible through the increase in all types of strengths stated above) with permanence in his own dynasty is to be realized through good deeds So long as the kingdom continues in his family so long the king = alive 15

The king in order to make the army strong and efficient emphasizes proper training and regular exercises in the art of warfare. Sukra advises him to always practise militry arrays and parades with the troops, and practise archery ete 29 4. 1.7

The Hierarchy and Officers

4 11 3 4 5

Sukrantil supplies detailed information about the hierarchy and nomenclature etc. of various grades of military officers. The king naturally is the Superme Commander of the forces with the Saciva in his council of ministers as chief advisor on military affairs. The commander of the army is perhaps called senadhipa ==

Different grades of military services are also mentioned. Following the tradition of Mahabharata, the smallest unit is called patti but its strength described in tukrantti differs from that of the former. Mahabharata makes a patti of fifty-five soldiers while jukrangu assigns only five or six soldiers to a patti whose chief is called pattipal. This is somewhat hearer to the strength described in valjayanti kosha which besides foot-soldiers mentions one charlot, one elephant and three horses, $1 : But the other grades are totally different in tukrantit. " > 1 '

The chief of thirty soldiers is called gaulmika and that of hundred satanika The best amesatanika, senam and tekhaka are to be appointed over every hundred soldiers as heads for functions. The officer over one thousand soldiers II "while' the ayutika is head of ayata or a divi-Mahabharata also mentions number of soldiers.28 The for regular training of soldiers in Military parades and warfare practices and the amidalanika is his o senant is responsible for the direction to guard tinals while the Gaulmika or Gulmapa inspects night duty The pattipa is made responsible to co rotation of watchmen on duty at night. The lekhoo ains accounts and different types of reports of the whereabouts etc The master of twenty horses or el is called navaka,24

Sukra mentions a number of officers heading the di departments. These are heads of the departments for hants horses, chariots etc. and are supposed to be exp. their specialized fields All these officers are directed to their special marks etc 24

Status and Paraphernalia

The status of various grades of military officers is also de cribed in fukrantii The commander of one hundred troop called tarantka is equated in status with master of te tillages called nayola We may imagine, therefore, that the nayaka or lord on 20 horses or elephants must be of same status These are authorized to travel on borsebacks with attendants The ruler of one hundred villages called samonta is equal to the commander of one thousand troops schamka and both of these should have the vehicle of a chariot driven by one horse with ten attendants. The ruler of one thousand of villages (mandallka) and commander of ten thousand troops magas transaction to their status and are asked to travel by vehicles carried by men or two horses or on an elephant with twenty attendants. The commander of fifty thousand it equated with the ruler of ten thousand villages tacorano a sparat) and both are authorized to travel by all types of vehicles driven by four horses with many attendants. types or resulting to the regulated according to the magnitude of the juisdiction to This reminds one of the status of military flicers in modern times made equivalent to those of civil crice it is remarkable that no authority other than date.

Rules for Military Personnel

Sokra does appear neither to favour a free mingling of military personnel with civilians nor to give free time to them. He therefore, has made certain rules and advises the ting to make the solders follow the same.²⁷

Sukra advices the king to station the troops outside the willage but not far away from it and to forbid any type of financial relationship between the villagers and soldiers addiers are not to be permitted to enter the village without any royal business or a royal permit. There should be no daily dealing between the two and the goods to be purchased by soleiers should be made awaisable in their cantionment. No soldier should be posted at a place for more than a year. They should not be appointed in works other than war

The military regulations are to be regularly communicated to the soldiers. They are to be managed in such a way that all least one thousand of them in a cantoniment can be ready for service in an instant. They should be regularly paid and the trainees should also get ball the amount of the actual salary. One-thirtieth of the amount added to the actual expenditure would be paid to soldiers when they are on travel on state days.

The king is advised to practise mintary parades with troops and make them practise strike the objective by means of missiles daily at the stated hours. They should be counted (the modern roll-call) both in the morating and the evening-fielder practice in ware-terreist the tooliger should always keep their arms, weapons and uniforms etc. quite clean, bright and ready for use.

The troops are instructed by Sakra to forsake violence, rivalry; procrassination over state dutes, indifference in the injuries of the sing, conversion and conversation with other. The king should pounds those who do not obey the commands, and have illied; commercions with victous persons and tennikes. The king is asked to forsake the servants, who are Poleutricackets.

Sukra anticipates the modern practice of keeping the army

men ever busy in their own affairs and not free mee civilians Even they are to be entertained at the can and not in the village 25

Unity and Loyalty in the Army

Sukra puts much emphasis on the need of maintaining all the unity and loyalty in the army. This industre causing disaffection among enemy's soldiers has been a mon practice as a means of subjugating the foe and S himself approves of it 20

The king is advised, therefore, to rely more upon the mi kind of army in the times of war as this does not detire lease the master even at the point of death He, moreon is advised to make his army faithful to him by giving anany and booty to the soldiers to

The author of tukrantss frames policy towards army to be followed by the king in order to maintain its unity and loyally The king is expected to analyze the causes of alienation and disaffection of the army belonging to himself or the enemy. He should always by gifts and artifices remove duaffection and alteration of his army at well as promote the same among enemy's troops Sukra opines that the alreas. tion among soldiers is generally caused by harsh words, cut in wages threats and longer work and life in foreign lands, bence the king should refrain from these things. He suggests that the soldiers must be controlled by special methods and never by fines as comprehensive discussion on the use of parious arms and expens to Hada India needs allogathes an independent uly but harranti strange enough dives not go to as smuch fails on this lister as it does in other sphere; were may are fact, tritical of g and or End valide. Only the weapons und prodes are d'agriced on one of $2.5, and if is on this I find an of a figure school of a secretary and state on the figure of the school of the second of t Been diter thes of aire collegenia and faire

Arms and Weapons

But dred as a waging the my areas of my be more of mantra (charms or magic), machine or fire while any other weapons (word, arrow, dagger etc.) are called tastra." Ifter all is to be noted that Sakra's classification is very simple while other authorities like interpretable, against and vishnadharmottara has classified these in four or five catagorie. W mukta (thrown) annakta (not ishrown) mukta-mukta and yantra-mukta (thrown by machines) or palimukta (thrown by had), mukta-mukta (thrown and received both) annakta (not thrown) and nijudha or bahuyudha (wresting etc.)*

Sukrantit classifies the astra in two sub-categories the manified (by charms, magic etc.) and nálika (tubular or Cylindrical) of small or large size. The king, however, is advised to use the latter where the former is not available. The description of small and large sized nálitha weapons one is reminded of small guns and canonin respectively. They, if properly tued, our suad to be giver of success in war. The methods of making both types of nálikásíran as well ist suppowder and the balls have been discussed by Sukra in some detail which shows that being a new thing he has paid special attention to the same **

Some other fastras are also measioned: these are arrow, club, different forms of spears or darks (patitha, prada and kunta) sword, disc with sharp tecth, noose, finger-nails with strait and helmet *2 In other Hindu literature, one can very easily find a list more detailed and comprehensive It is allow straigh either more detailed and comprehensive It is also straigh that manifina stras are not further elaborated by the author of Sukranti while the prefers their up.

Fortresses

The significance of the fort in Hindu polity and warfate is self-evident from the fact that it is regarded as one of the teven limbs of the state. Sukernatt has devoted a small but complete section for the discussion about the same. It is said that one man with arms is able to fight one hundred if he is well protected in a fort and a hundred men similarly placed can fight ten thousand attackers. The king, hence is advised to have forts.²⁸

Sukra, following Manu, mentions six types of forts while Kautilya menitoned only four types. According to dukratit the parikha fort is surrounded on all sides by great diches and the parigha is well protected by walls; what or forestfort in made in dense forest enerticled by high thoris and clusters of trees etc. and the dinamen at known to be situated in a place round about which no water is found (desertfort) and the jaladinge is surrounded by great sheets of water while the hill-fort or gritedinge is made on high level with supply of water in plenty. Plarkha and parigha are not separately mentioned by Kauthlya, Sukra gasin divides the forts in two categories: the one is sanayadings or troop-fort and the other subdyadings or help-fort and both afthes at regarded as ornaments of all forts without which other forts.

regarded as ornaments of all forts without which other lotting are of no use to the king. It is asserted that the fort with troops is the best while the others are auxiliaries to this; the king, therefore is advised to have this fort fist, 40 A mutual dependence among different kinds of forts and their resourcefulness is highly emphasized by Sukra and the king it advised to have all these forts well provided with all types of materials necessary in wars 41 Kinds of twar. The war has been defined in sukranter as 'the affair that two parties, who have immical relations with each other, under take by means of arms to satisfy their revisil atterets 47 Office the satisfy their revisil atterets 47 Office.

definition makes is clear that was should be fought to satisfy conflicting claims by the rival parties who are immical to each other. It naturally implies that it should not be fought with friends even if there are some conflicting claims between them.

Three kinds of was are mentioned in lukrantit. The delika (where chains or maintain are used), the sawra (where mechanical devects are used), and the maining twhere laintain about a reveal and the roll and is a reveal of the delika, owner and maining are termed on the same basis, in another parages, a strama (lought with charmed instruments or maintain), and, other measurally, manyment get in the charmed instruments.

(with weapons), and adhama (with hands) kinds of war 44 It is strange that Sukra has a preference for asura war to the human one as generally Hindus regard any thing asura or demonic as inferior to the human one while the daivika or divine is always superior to the same, Following this tradition, Sukra should have placed the human one in middle order and the asura to the worst one but he prefers asura war to the human one.

Desirability of the War

Indian tradition and even social order, although, culogize and encourage the war, sukrantii approves of it only as a fast resort. Sukra advises the king to adopt sama, dana, and , bheda successively to win over the enemy; the danda (including war) is to be employed only after failure of all the preceding policies.42 Again, it is said that war should be undertaken when no other remedy is left 40

Suitable time for Warfare

Sukra emphasizes, proper aludy of one's own or enemy's resources as well as elimatic conditions before commencing any war. He suggests that the farad hemant and fifir (the sit months from sixin to phalguns) are the best season (uttama) for war; the spring (wasant) to middling (madhyama) and the summer (grishma) the worst (adhama) season while the war is never allowed in rains (varsha) at

Similarly, when the king is well provided with military requirements and master of a sufficiently strong army, and feeling enthusiasm for war, with the presence of good omens, the time is said to be auspicious for commencement of a war. Sukra asserts that, 'The Ling who is provided with good supplies, is endowed with the six attributes' of statecraft, and equipped with sufficient arms and ammunitions, should desire to fight. Otherwise he gets misery and dethroned from the kingdon."es

But one should not, according to Sukra, wait for the proper season if very urgent matter arises or protection of cows, women, and brahamana is concerned."

The War Field

The author of intrantic has also discussed the characteristic of different types of battle-fields or zones of military openitions in order to make the king choose one according to his circumstances: That field is said to be the best which prevides all the facilities for the regular parada and excretises of one's own troops properly but no such facilities are available to the enemy, the middling or good zone provides (qui) facilities for the both and in the worst battle-field the conditions of first order are reversed in favour of the enemy ¹⁶

The Expedition

An aggression on enemy mealled yana in sukrantit. This is for the promotion of one's own interests and destruction of those of the enemy 53 Sukra mentions five kinds af expeditions vigrihya, sandhaya, sambhuva, prasanga and upekshya. In the first the army proceeds by gradually over-powering groups of enemies-some authorities define it. Sukra mentions, as an expedition in which one's friends fight with the adversary's friends on all sides, while one's own army proceeds against the main enemy When an expedition is made after making alliance with some supporters of the enemy, it is called sandhays. The sambhuya expedition !! made by the king aided by resourceful and skilled feudatories. The prasanga is a kind of expedition which begins against a certain enemy but incidently proceeds against another and the last expedition called upekshya neglects the enemy and then retreats after facing adverse results $2

Stationing or Position

Stationing or Position simpained as one of six altibutes, Sukra defines it as a position from which one can be protected and the entern is destroyed. He advises to station with freops at those places from where nearly a stmp could be over-powered with autres. The disams should be taken in such a way that supply line to the enterny could be cut. From its manocurre one is advised to destroy those people who help the enemy by carrying wood, water and provious.

If appears that Sukra, like an expert multiary commander, examines all the possibilities in one's favour and advises the higg to da accordingly. Not only the season of war, but the choice of the style of expedition and the battle-field as well as the strategic possibilities and sufficient of the style of expedition and the battle-field as well as the strategic possibilities and surfacilities of the state of the style of the state of the style of the state of the style of the state of the state

A cease-fire or cessation from military hostilities is called sandhaya dzana by Sukra. It occurs when both the enemy and the aggressor get tired and stop the war but do not retirest from their respective positions *5

Refuge

Seeking refuge with a powerful, and honest ruler with good feature refuge with a scaled detaya by Sukra. It is needed in case one is overpowered by the enemy and no remedy a available to him to counteract the defeat. One should take refuge with the firsneds, relatives and kintfolk or with the paid friends or sharers in the benefits of victory. Forts are also said to be unposeed defined.

Duplicity

It is said that when the king is doubtful about the effectiveness of the methods of work to be employed or he is waiting for opportune time, he should adopt one but display the other. This is called draidhibhana or duplicity. These four (Jana, Atana, Atana and draidhibhana) plus peace (undhi) and wat (nigraha) are called six attribets (sadgmar) and the king is advised to study all there before making any aggression upon the enemy.

Military Arrays or Bettle-orders

Making of military arrays or battle-orders m regarded as the most significant aspect of the traditional military science in India Even the modern experts command a mastery over this aspect according to modern tactics and methods of warfare A commander should be r but a great strategist and maker of a

The commander is advised to emp. arrays not only in battle-field but also difficulties arise through rivers, hills, No single array should always be prefer should devise one two or more of the of them keeping in view the strength o as the topography character of mada a array of the enemy w

Some of the vighus have been defined with in certain situations by Sukra The nonarrays is also an indicator to the nature an the same It is instructed that the mickury of frend or bird array and the shall of needle according to the physical shape of the mentior things are of utmost utility if danger is In the cases of danger being behind or on . fixate of carriage array and some Pettisely Bertini for warfare is not acquired. The war should then be taken with troops successively by ministers and the king,

It is wareed that deserter troops from the enemy must not be placed near the main army. They should be made use of separately in other works and in wars should be used fits. The troops of the firends may be placed in the front, at the tear or the wings. It The king is, moreover, advised not to appoint the untrained nefficient and the raw recruits in the actual war as they all are like balls of cotton. They should be assigned to take other than actual wafare. The king is advised to 'make expedition' against even a small adversary not with an array small but but no monther?

The discussion on vyahas makes at clear that the author of sukrantti is not only a socio-political thinker but an expert in military science as well.

Rules of War

War is usdoubtedly an affair of much cruelty and destruction but the Indian blunkers have tried to make it was human as possible by framing a code of conduct agreed upon betwen both the parties. Mahabharata supplies a large number of rules 80 befollowed in a war to make it a dharmayudha. Manu, Gautama, Yandavalkya, Yiridha Harita and tome other have also supported such rules.

Sakra, following the same tradition, states certain rules to be followed by both the parties. Persons and weapons equally matched should be used against each other. The horseman has to be attacked by the kunta sword, the charioter and the man with the elephant by arrow, the elephant by elephant, the horse by horse, the chariot by charot, the infinitive by minatity, one by one, the weapon by wear and the castra by astrant as the state the ground, is deformed, is to seated with hair dishevelled, ur seeing others who water, taking the state of the retreating should not be killed Similarly, one should not hill the old man, the infant, the woman as well as the lonely king. But killing by prescribed methods is not taken to be a drivation from the path = Sukra, therefore, allows the killing of even infant or a brahman if any of them is coming upon our with weapons in band or nurdereous intent?

Flying away from the battlefield in order to save one's own life is not appreciated. Such people are said to be in good as dead and are hable to suffer alone the sins of the whole kingdom. One who dies while fighting bravely in the battlefield it, on the other hand, entitled to the great position that it attained by the sages after long and tedious penances. A man who is killed in battles is purged and delivered of all sins and fairles of the other world vie with each other in reaching the watriot who is killed in battles in the hope that he be their husband. All these rules, however, are to be followed only in a dharmayudha. Sukra tends to prefer katavudha against the powerful enemy and cites examples of Rama, Krishna, India and other gods who could overpower their enemies only through employment of Auta or deceiful tactics " It is cleaf hat Sukra, being practical thinker, understands human natare and is in favour of exploiting the circumstances not caring or the scrupulousness of the means It has been rightly ction that would lead to the desired object to kind a financial manufact administration and set of war between control of the comprehensive and supplies ample endence of the centrality of the author to the military strateger. His proposable traditional as well as original the perhaps the alphaness of the control of the proposable that the propo

General References

- 1. Sukranett, 4-2 14-15. 2. Sukrangel, 47 4-8 3. Kane, P.V., History of Dharmafastra, Vol HI, P 676 4. Sukrantil, (tr E K. Sarkat) p 677. 5. Sukranget, 4 7 9-13. 6. Bukrantti, 47 14. ٠., . . Kalle with the end of the
- .. Kaue, P.V., History of Dharmagestras, Vol III. p 680 22. Sukrantii, 2.141-42.
- 23. Udyogaparva, 155.28,29.
- 24 Sukransii, 2.143-147.
- 25. Sukrangti, 2.148-149
- 26. Sukrantil, 1.183.85,191-92 and 5.81-85 27. Sukrantti, 4.7.382-93 and 5 91-95.
- 28 Sukrantil, 5 Pl 11 Sukrantti, 4 7 188
- 30 Sukrangii, 47 182-85.
- 31, Sukrantil, 47,183-84,174. 32. Kane, P.V. History of Dharmagastres Vol. III m 686 Sinha, B P.
- Studies in Cultural History of India, p. 157 and others 35. Sukrangi, 47.191.
- 34 Kane, P.V History of Dharmagestras, Vol III p. 686-87.
- 35. Sukrantii, 4 7.192-94,
- 36 Sukranttl, 4.7.195-210. 37 Sukranfti, 4 7,211-217.
- III Sukrantil, 4 6 10-11
- 39. Kane, P.V , History of Dharmagastras, Vol. III, p 663-64 40. Sukrangii, 4 6 1-8.
- 41. Sukrantti, 4,6 12-14.

42. Sukrantti, 4 7 219-20 43 Sukrantil, 4 7 220-21

44. Sukramti, 47 334-39 45. Sukranții, 4 7 37.

46. Sukraniti, 4.7.253.

47. Sukrantsi, 47 223-24 48. Sukranpi, 47 222 and 225

49. Sukrantii, 4 7 225 50 Sukrangtl, 4 7.227-30.

51. Sukrangti, 47 235 52. Sukrantri, 47 253-60

33 Sukrantti, 47.235 54. Sukrantti, 47.284-86

55. Sukrantil, 4 7 287 56. Sukrantu, 47 288-90.

57. Sukrantil, 47,291-92

38 Sukrantti, 4 7 263 and 283-84 59. Sukransti, 4 7 264-65 and 278-282

60. Sukrantil, 4 7 266-75 61. Sukransil, 4 7 190,343-46

62 Sukransii, 47 177-79

63 Sinha, B F . Studies in the Cultural History of It

64. Kane, P.V., History of Dharmagastras, Vol III ; 65 Sukrantti, 47 336-57 66. Sutrantii 4 7.358-61

67. Sukrangs, 47,323-27 68. Sukrantil, 47 309-14

69. Sukransii, 47 362-64 70 Sukramert, (er B K Sackarl, p. 253

10

Principles of Diplomacy and Inter-State Relations

Principles of Diplomacy and Inter-State Relations

Almost all the political pandas of Hindus have elaborately discussed the principles of inter-state relations. War, which is also a sort of relationship between the states, has already been discussed in the preceding chapter. Here, we are, therefore, mainly concerned with other aspects. As wardine relations are not normal, we should separately study the norms of inter-state relationship in normal or no-war-times. The author of Sukramit, following the Archdature-Smril tradition has discussed this aspect of policy in detail

Object of Foreign Policy: Friends The first and foremost object of the foreign policy of a king is to win powerful friends in order to make his state stronger and his enemy weaker. The friend is mentioned as a basic element of the state by Hindu authorities and Sukra also approves of this view and calls the friend as ear to the state,1 Manu. and Yajnavalkya both give priority even in a weak but good friend over sold or land, although Kautilya place the friend at number three in the list of his priorities. Mahabharata and Kamandaka exhibit practical approach by stating that a friend or a foe is gained always according to the riches and deeds of a king. Sukra's approach in this regard is more near to that of mahabharata when he says that all kings are unfriendly and secret enemies of valours, rising and powerful men as they themselves are coverous of kingdom. The kines can have no friends and can be no friends in any body. Their friendship is generally artificial and only some of them are always friends or enemies by nature." Sukra thus appears to believe that there is nothing like permanent friendship in politics and it is the need of the hour that makes one friend or a foc.

Mandal Theory

The mandala theory finds mention in Hindu political willing since Kautilya who is the author of the system Mana, yajnavalkya, Kamandaka and the authors of nturakyamis, nttimayakha, and rajantuprakas etc have borrowed this theory from Kautilya. The modern scholars, therefore, bave based their interpretation mostly on the basis of Kaulilya's arthalastru. The doctrine of mandala, according to these scholars, imparted a very symmetrical or to the relationships resulting from the quest for suzerainty and the consequent need of astate diplomacy and alliances . This theory imagines a cluster of states with a complex relationship holding each state in centre in its turn. It is argued that a state in naturally inclined to be either friendly or bostile to its neighbouring states and a number of problems are natural to arise. For the facility of consideration of the steps that should be taken by a state in particular situation, the ancient Indian politicians found it convenient to carry on their deliberations on the footing of a mandala a According to Kautilya the mandala is usually constituted of twelve states or kings in the following orders the five states in the five zones in front of the vijigishu or the central state are art (enemy), mitra (friend) ari-mitra (enemy's friend), mitra-mitra (friend's friend), ari-mitra-mitra (friend of the enemy's friend) while the four states in the four zones in the rear are parsnigraha (rear-enemy, the interal meaning being healcatcher) diranda (rest-friend), paranigrahasara (reat enemy's friend) and sorandssara (scar friends' friend). Besides these, wo states adjecent to the central are called madh) ama medium) and adjetus (super) Thus the central state and its nemy together with those four states in the four zones on he side on which the enemy stands, and the four states in he four zones on the other side plus the medium and the oper states constitute the manefals.

oken also discusses the circular inter-state relationship. He was to attach no improtance to the concept of the advisorabing, he does not mention him. He, thereofire, recars to clinify the other hings only in three categories.

re (enemy), mitra (friend or ally), and udastna (indifferent reper). Kinga, according to Sukra are said to be situated to the following order: in all sides first enemes, then the fiends, and then the undifferents. It appears that Sukra coept the geographical basis of freendship or enmity as ell as the theory that enemy's enemy is always a friend fe, however, does not tend to support the view that enemy's fired should naturally be taken as a foe; he takes him rather a an indifferent. The nearest neighbor us the greatest enemy but those gradually recoding from king's neighborhood are leaser eachies auccessively. In the same extract, be king is advised to check the ministers and servants who were promised to him.

nemy but those gradually recoding from king's neighbotheod are lesser earnies successively. In the same extract, he king is advised to check the ministers and servants who were very recommendate of the servants who are very proximate to him okra, however, accepts the general theory laid down by autilys that the immediate neighbouring state in front bould be assumed to be infirmed. A number of examples were from modern history could be cited to support this way. It has been argued that the ennity between France and Germany, between Poland and Russia, and between hims and Japan before second world war were largely due their contiguity, which often caused conflicts of interests. It be examples of ennity between Isdia and Pakistan, India and China, even Russia and China, and Iran and Iran from day's world could be cited to support the thory where the could be considered to the contractions.

were a world could be cited to support the theory when known it well that there could be some causes other an mere neighbourhood of the enmity between kings. He, erefore, following Kannadaka, defines an enemy at the na who is a rival elaimant of exclusive ownership over the me matter and w a destroyer of one's interests. The cateriors of friends and forse based not on geographical situations of friends and forse based not on geographical situations of the cateriors towards each other are also mentioned: the tend and the enemy are of four kinds—one who does also others do, approves of, and helps in things that are spectively beneficial and harmful 18

alance of Power

ikra fully realizes the significance of the theory of balance in view the temporary nature of the the advises the king to adopt the policies

The application of four—fold policy to the enemy is obviously different. The relationship of mutually not injuring and some times helping each other in needs is called sima applied to emers. Pacification of the powerful enemy by paying frobits or annual incomes from definite tracts of land excording to their strength and status is called dana applied to a for The separation or helpind of enemies is that which is due to making their friends powerfus Simularly, a danda paplied to enemy includes attack upon them, their riches and grains by dacoits or aggression upon them with powerful army and not stopping was rif if it has commenced Sukra 10858tis that these wave and policits are to be employed keeping in faith the ends one plans to achieve the employed keeping the employed keeping the employed keeping the employed keeping Sukra gives some directions also so as to apply the fourfold policy in different cases. He strictly forbids the application of partition and punishment to friends Alliance or sama and gifts are to be adopted towards frinds never the policies of playing off one against another or punishment to A similar approach is to be adopted for one's own subjects as the state would be mined if bheda or danda policy is employed one should never rule his own subjects by the policies of separation or punishment but by those of peace and gifts. The state is likely to be mined through punishment and partition of one's own subjects 17 Here Sukra's approach should be appreciated that he does not make difference between friends and one's own subjects. This view is supported by the same extract stating that the subjects are to be so governed that they can be neither too powerless nor too powerful A similar policy, as we have seen, is supposed to be adopted towards the friends by the king Sukra's equal treatment to friends and subjects exhibits his high sense of reality as disequilibrium in each of the both may lead to destruction.

No part of the four-fold policy however, m forbidden, unlike the friends and subjects, for enemies Some variations, are naturally to be made according to the status and strength of the enemy 'The general principle provides for application of peace, purchase, partition and penalty or punishment successively to the enemies; stome is to be fasts adopted. Then the policy of Purchase. The enemies have always to be played off against one another, and the policy of panishment is to be adopted to items of danger to existence? Besufes this percent principle, Sakra mentions the conditions which require different types of means to be adopted for enemies having different degrees of strength. He advises application of only askna and disast to the first estepty of powerful enemies and general and below are to be applied to the enemy somewhat superior to oneself. The equals are to be treated with partition and punishment and only punishment is required if the enemy is inferior to oneself or powerful. The method of war, however, is to be employed only with the fast resorts.

The practicability of Sukra's suggestions is self-evident. One very well knows that the application of force against a stronger enemy is not likely to produce desired furth, here Sukra does not favour application of deved to both the superior types of enemy while dana is not mentioned for the equal and inferior enemies. It is, however, strange that Sukra has not mentioned bheda to be adopted towards the enemy of the superior category.

It is, however, remarkable that Sukra peopores the application of the same policy to the subjects of the enemy which he does for joint's own subjects. He argues that application of partition and punshment by the enemy cause disaffection among their subjects and tends to one's success, hence one should win over these oppressed subjects of enemies, by the policies of peace and purchase. And, as a corollary to this, the talented but wacked men should always be bannibed.³⁸ This also proves Sukra's keep political sense as well as a synthesis of rightcoussers and diplomacy as a liberal approach even to the deferred enemy's subjects is also favoured beath an adversarial enemy's subjects is also involuted the method of danda should be applied only if he other devices are with tables. Banus states, if they (the enemy) the table of the state of the nake use of three devices other than danda as far as ossible,22 Sukra is, thus, not only following the tradition out anticipating also the modern concepts of diplomacy which attempts to avoid war as far as possible

Significance of Bheda

Sheda, it is strange, has been eulogized by Sukra much more han any other part of the four-fold policy. The mygisu king s advised to adopt bheda and samairya (refuge with a tronger one) in order to defeat the enemy as these are best paya and sadguna. He should adopt such means as lead to walry or conflict between the Commander-in-Chief and Councillors of the enemy, and strife among their subjects or vomen 21

t is said that very powerful enemy should be satisfied by ervice and humiliation, the strong ones should be served by honours and presents and the weaker ones by wars. He hould win over the equals by alliance or friendship and subjugate all by policy of separation There is no other means of subjugation the foe except by causing disaffection among their soldiers 24 It is, therefore, clear the sama and dana are preferred for one's own subjects and the friends as well as for the subjects of enemies; the bheda and danda are favoured to be applied mostly to the enemies and that too emphasizing the use of bheda leaving danda or war as the last resort. Only the most powerful enemy in to be treated with sama and dana as his anger, if aroused by any of the other two upayas, may prove fatal.

Sadgunas or six attributes

Sadgunas-alliance of treaty, war, expedition, stationing, refuge and duplicity-are considered as important aspects of inter-state relations. These are essentially concerned with the preparation or fighting of war and, therefore, the last five have been discussed in the preceding chapter and do not need any repetition here. Alliance or treaty (sandhi) is not necessarily a result or cause or part of war ; it is essentially a diplomacy. Hence a separate discussion on this is warranted here.

Then the policy of Purchase. The enemies have always to be played off against one another, and the policy of punishment is to be adopted in times of danger to existence. Besides this general principle, Sukra mentions the conditions which require different types of means to be adopted for enemies having different degrees of strength. He advise application of only stems and dana to the first category of powerful enemies and stems and bender are to be applied to the enemy somewhat superior to oneself. The equals are to be treated with partition and punishment and only punishment and only punishment in equited of the enemy is inferior to oneself or power that the enemy somewhat superior to oneself or power than the enemy somewhat superior to oneself or power than the enemy somewhat the enemy is inferior to oneself or power than the enemy somewhat have been adopted to the entities of the enemy somewhat have been adopted to the enemy somewhat the enemy is inferior to oneself or power than the enemy somewhat the less. The method of war, however, is to be employed only the last resport #9

The practicability of Gukra's suggestions is self-evident Overy well knows that the application of force against stronger enemy is not likely to produce desired fruit, he will be suffered to both superior types of enemy while dama is not mentioned for equal and inferior enemies. It is, however, straigs Sukra has not mentioned bheds to be adopted toward enemy of the superior category

It is, however, remarkable that Sukra proposes if tion of the same policy to the subjects of the enhe does for one's own subjects. He argues that a of partition and punishment by the enemy cawe damong their subjects and leads to one's success; should win over these oppressed subjects of enerpolicies of peace and purchase. And, as a corolthe talented but wicked men should always b' This also proves Sukra's keen political sens' synthesis of replicousness and diplionacy at a li' even to the defeated enemy's subjects is also f Bhishma and Manu, like Kukra, also sup-

the method of danda should be applied devices meet with failure. Manu states cannot be he three first exp being even a horse if the other side is more powerful Similarly, his suggestion of making treaty with the anarya king in order to protect oneself is realistic free from all prejudices of caste and creeds. His warning that an enemy, even after making the treaty, should never be completely trusted also exhibits his tense of history and human nature. Even the modern diplomary finds no direction of Sukra superfluous in the politics of today's world

Sukra's approach is nearer to that of Kautilya who has studied this problem even in more details Like Sukra, he also advises the king to accept the most humiliating terms in times of danger from a more powerful enemy and to wait for his opportunity to free himself from this servitude #1 Both the thinkers do not encourage the mood of chivalry when the existence and interests of the kingdom are in danger.

Attitude Towards Defeated ones

Kautilya has mentioned three types of conquests, dharmavilaya (satisfied with acceptance of suzerainty only), lobhavijaya (satisfied by getting land and tax etc.) and asuravijaya (satisfied by not only sunexation of the land but killing the whole family of the defeated king). 33

Sukra, being a synthesizer of righteousness and practicability, appears to favour the idea of lobhavijaya when he states that the victorious king should realize revenue from the defeated one according to his capacity , he, some times, keeping in view the ment of the case, could make annexation of a portion or half or the whole of the conquered state to his own terstories.20

He is advised to enter in the state made his own by war with the sounds of drums, taryya etc. and protect like his childern the people thus on over and made one's own. He should change the member of the Council of Ministers and other important officers of the defeated country, 4 This is to be done perhaps in order to control the defeated king and to make his suzerainty felt by the people of defeated country.

It is termatkable that Sukra not only referant from killing of the defeated king and his firmly hus, on the contray, make proper previous for a respectful lising of the same He proposes to grant minienance beginning with the day of capture to the defeated king half of 11 to his son and a quarter to his wife.

Sukta offers one-fourth of the conquered territory to the son of the defeated king if he is well qualified; otherwise, he is to receive only thirty-second part of it. 18 This sety much proves that the author of lukrantit is not un favour of humiliating or annihilating the defeated king and his family. This liberal estitude is a good example of the humanenss of Indian politics. These concessions, however, are to be granted only if the defeated king is nell behaved.

state for his own enjoyment. He, however, is advised to pay the interest of the half of the tressure: to the defeated kins until it accedes double of the amounts to taken 27 This indicates that the treasure won by the king is to be considered as his personal property while the taxes and other incomes from the conquered territory ware regarded as revenue of the state. Here the wiew that the silver, good or other booty belongs to him who wins it is justified. The king is advised to give them those things according to the labour undergone. **

The conqueror is asked to make all the efforts to gratify the subjects of the conquered king and establish a court of justice in one's own names perhaps in order to make the people accept his authority in practice

Sukra also issues some directions to regulate conquiete's behaviour towards the employees of the defeated one. He is supposed not to destroy the army of enemy's friend even if they are in danger "It appears that Sukra, by this deliberate act, destres to wan over enemy's friend and thus impire a partition between enemy and his allies. This liberal attitude naturally would create soil feelings in the core of the heart of enemy's friend and he would not be a permanent enemy when the war is over. Similarly, Sukra does not allow a territory very near one's own to be made over to others so as to stop if from becoming an enemy's base. The employees of the conquered king, who have been alreasted and are instrumental in serving one's purposes, should be maintained by good remuneration but those who are victims of cupicity and inactivity are to be maintained only by half remuneration. The well-qualified men, who have been descrited by the enemy, should be honoured and have been deserted by the enemy, should be honoured and appointed on good remuneration,41 Sukra, thus, discusses each and every problem and leaves no important matter to be decided by king's discretion. The king, even in his attitude towards the defeated enemy and his virtuous employees, is supposed to follow certain principles which are not to be governed by king's whims And the principles laid down here, as we have seen, are m total confirmity with the furtherance of the material interests of the state as well as the principle of humaneness. Actually, for these principles, Sukra owes his gratitude to the Indian tradition which does not permit of the annexations of territory and killing of the defeated kings and their families but rather approves of their reinstalment if they are well-behaved and lays it down that in the case of their death or removal sameone related to their families should be made king of the conquered territory and the conqueror should satisfy himself by the annual tributes and recognition of his suzerainty, Manu, Kaulitya, Yaiftavalkya and other authorities generally subscribe to this view with minor differences not in any way deviating from the general principle,42 It is strange that this was not only a theoretical presumption but was an actual practice. It has been pointed out that the travellers of the last centuries of the first millennium of Christ bear a witness to this peculiarly human method of conquest. Sulaiman, one of the travellers, has observed : When a king subdues a neighbouring state, he places over it a prince belonging to the family of the fallen king, who carries on the government in the name of the conqueror. The inhabitants will not suffer it to be otherwise.43 Sukra, in no vague terms, declares : The king should maintain the dispossessed princes for the display of his own majesty by the bestowal of honours if well-behaved but pupish them if noliked *4

Policy of the Dispossessed King Sukra also lays down certain guide lines to be followed by a king who is cuber conquered or made to agree to enemy's conditions or dispossessed of his kingdom. He advises the king who is either defeated or made to surrender to the enemy to tolerate all humiliation in order to please the conqueror and to wait and prepare for the opportune moment for the revival of his glory. Sukra declares that the wise should place insult or humiliation in the front and honour or glory at the back in order to fulfil his desired object. It Ill folly to lose one's object. The conquered king, therefore, is advised to inspire confidence in the enemy by various methods such as appearance with a sweet smiling face before him, soft words, confession of and repentance for guilt, praise, gifts, service, good offices and oaths etc.46 He is advised to accept the terms and conditions that may satisfy the conqueror and study the defects and weaknesses of the enemy with the hope of overpowering him one day even at the expiry of a century. One should, says Sukra, wait guardedly like the cat and the fowler and by creating confidence extirpate the enemy,48 Even a dispossessed king should not give up the hope of recapturing his Lingdom Sukra, in the first place, advises the king not to leave his place as teeth, nails, hair and kings do not look well when out of their proper situations. He (the king) if defeated, is advised to take shelter in the billforts in times of great danger and should attempt to recapture his kingdom. Sukra allows of his having recourse to violence and even robbery (das) unresa) in recover his kingdom 47 It is something very strange that even robbery is sanctioned as a means of recapturing the lost kingdom by the dispossessed king. He is advised to be severe, active and unkind in the act of robbery but it advised not to be attached to others' wises and violate the girls of respectable families He is allowed by Sukra to seize all the wealth of enemies but one-eighth of the amount so taken is to be left for rringes, sacrifices and charity etc. This robber king is ised not to live for ever in the same palace and never have nd faith in anybody. 68 appears that Sukra here approves of a sort of guerrilla tics to be followed by a dispossessed king who is allowed even robbery to raise the means for his livelihood as well for necessary military operations to be attempted to recure his lost kingdom. That is why he advises the robber g to refrain from indulgence in vices unlike the ordinary coits and not to seize money kept for marriages, yajhas kra's advice to the conquered king except, of course, that having recourse to robbery—gets support from authorities Kautilya and Bhishma. Kautilya has devoted a complete apter on the discussion on the attitude of a conquered ages and Bhishma also parrates the story of kalakarrkstya mi's advice to a prince dispossessed of his lands and hes. 40 elations with the Feudatories e policy of non-annexation of the conquered territory and nstatement of defeated kings or their relatives as recognin of the conqueror's suzerainty is bound to create feudary states within the large empire of the conqueror. Sukra o mentions feudatories paying tributes to the king but a tailed and clear-cut account of their relationship with the ny is not found to his mitisara although some inferences, wever, could be drawn. kra, describing the eight-fold functions of the king, men-ons 'conversion of princes into tributary chiefs' as one of s main functions 41 This very well proves the existence of udatories in Sukra's political system. It is, however, not car what type of relationship is desirable between the king id the feudatories, but he appears to regard them an semidependent rulers who, sometimes, could be so powerful as cause the king making separate treaties with them in rises. Sukra, at one place, advises the king to enter into an liance with his feudatories to protect himself from the powerful enemy.52 This shows a feudatory chief, not alway on the mercy of the king, playing a significant role not only internal but external affairs of the line Some ideas about the nature and status of different feuda tory rulers could be drawn through a study of Sukra's des cription of the various kinds of rulers and their paraphernalis etc.43 The lowest cader of the feudatories is called samonto who m said to be a ruler of one hundred villages with at income of one lac of silver karshas at minimum, The next category belongs to feudatories called mandalika who are given three hundred to one thousand villages with the respective increase in the annual revenue. One who rules over one thousand villages to two thousand ones with an income upto twenty lacs of silver karshas mentitled to be called a king or raja The maharaja or Great king in required to rule over upto five thousand villages with an income of fifty lacs of silver karshas at optimum It has been suggested that the description of the kings called swarat, samrat, virata and sarvabhauma is an ideal one at It, however, appears that the rulers of the cadre of maharaja and sometimes above it are granted the status of an independent king by Sukra. He authorizes the maharajadi rulers to remove the samaniads ones from their titles. The persons so removed are to be called hing samonts and not samonts if maintained by the mahajaja and others at the same salary. It is possible that the conquered kings and their heirs, if deprived of their kingdoms, should fall under this category. It is also to be noted in the same extract that a person appointed by the king to the assignment equivalent to that of samanta is not called by the same tule-he is rather designated not enjoy the same status and m an employee of the sovereign. Sukra allots different Linds of royal signs and paraphernalia to different cadres of feudatories. A ruler of hundred villages or samanta is authorized to travel in a chariot driven by one horse with ten armed guards. The manfalika or feudstory as onusamenta This indicates that a samento is a ruler of some semi-independent status whereas the anusamanta does

194 The Polity in Subrantustra

over one thousand villages could travel in a palanquin, a chariot driven by two horses or an elephant with twenty guards where as the feudatory chief above this cadre in entitled to travel in the chariot driven by four horses and all other types of conveyances with a large number of guards etc.4 This classification clearly indicates at least three grades under the suzerainty of maharaid. It is to be noted that the rulers of large states in medievel and even modern times were called by maharajas while their feudatories and lesser rulers were designated as raorajas We could only imagine that Sukra would not object to or rather approve of feudatories giving their daughters to the kings, paying regular visits to the royal court, assisting their sovereign in war and performing such other duties according to their status as he does not attempt to a systemic and comprehensive discussion regarding the duties and functions of the same, it, however, appears that the feudatories are to rule in their territory, according to Sukra, in the name of their sovereign as the latter is advised to establish courts of justice in his name in the kingdoms he conquers.

Department of Inter-State relations

Sukrantii bents in favour of establishing an independent department of later-state or external affairs headed by a minuter called mantim. He holds an importate position in the Council of Ministers as he occupies fifth seat in the order of sailority. He is made responsible for the delberations, decisions and actions regarding the application of four-fold policy. He is, therefore, required to be an expert in the theory and practice of intilation.

It appears that he is likely to be assisted in his work by data. The qualifications required in a data indicate that be abould be well-versed in four-fold policy as well as surattributes (sadgunas) and should possess a clever tongue with retentive memory and boldness. It is inferred that this data could serve as an ambassador to other states, although Sukra makes no mention of any embassy in his nitiatas. It is, therefore, possible that this data to play the role of high-powered messanger or diplomatic mustion to other shades.

Principles of Diplomacy and Inter-State Relations 195

states in times of crises or grave matters He, because of this, perhaps, has not been mentioned as a regular member of the Council of Ministers by some other authorities

To conclude, at could very well be said that the author of fukrantti, following the Indian tradition of diplomacy, has deeply studied the different aspects of inter-state and foreign affairs. His approach is mostly logical and realistic and like other authorities on diplomacy he does not believe m moral scruples swaying over the material interests of the state but at the same time the principle of humaneness is not altogether ignored. He appears as a synthesizer of the pragmatic humanistic approaches in order to solve the intricate problems of diplomacy One has to agree with the view that, the mere enumeration of these (four-fold) policies and the statement of the objects for which each is to be applied are sufficient to prove the high political sense of the Hindus. The society which could evoive the state-craft that Sukracarya represents is certainly not that of a race bent solely on other-worldly activities, 40

General References

```
1 Sukrantil, 161.
 2 Kane DV 17 at-- - - PP01 -
7. Sukrantil, 4 1.19-22.
8. Altekar, A. S., State and Government in Ancient India p. 294
9. Sukrantti, 4 1 5.
10. Sukrantti, 4 1.1-2.
11. Sukrantil, 4 1 36.
12. Suk rangii, 4 1 23.
13 Sukrantti, 4 1 26
14 Sukrantti, 4,1,28-29.
15. Sukranşti, 4 1.31-35.
16. Sukrantii, 4.1 39.
17. Sukrantti, 4 1 41-42
II Sukranett, 4 1 37.
19. Sukrantit, 4 1,38
Ili Sukrantti, 4.1.39-40
21. Manu, 7.108.
22. Santiparra, 69.23.
23. Sukrantti, 4.7 69 23
24 Sukrantii, 47.184-188
25 Sukrangii, 4 7 234-39.
26. Sukrantti, 47.233-34
27. Sukrantii, 47 245-47
81 Sukrantti, 4 7 241-42
29 Sukrantti, 4.7 243-44.
30 Aukransti, 47 247-48.
31. Majumadar, R.C., The Age of imperial Unity, p. 316
27 . 1 ...
```

43 Elliot and Dowson, History of India, Vol. 1 p. 7. 44 Sukraneti, 47 404-5. 45 Sukraniil, 47 361-66.

46. Sukranith 5.2-5 47. Sutranget, 1 382-83

43. Sukrangii, 1.384-86 49 Arthataura, 716.

55 Sukrantii, 1 189-90 56. Sukrantit, 5 81-85. 57. Sukranssi, 275-77 18. Sukrangit, 2 93 96 59 Sukrantil, 2 37-58 60 Sukrantil, (er BK Sraker) p. 129.

50 Santiparra, 105 51. Sutrantil, 1 123-24 52. Sukrantzi, 4.7 241

53 Sukraniti, 1 183-92 and 5 81-55.

54 Altekar, A.S State and Government In Ancient India p. 30

A General Estimate

11

A General Estimate

The Subrantisara thus appears, on the basis of the study attempted in the preceding chapters, one of the most significant works dealing with the political deas and institutions of the Hindus. It shares, with all its freshness and originality of outlook, a longer and richer tradition of thought, philosophical as well as political. It would be enlightening to see how the various philosophical and socio—political ideas of ancient Hindus are reflected as the Subrantin.

Philosophical Concepts and Sukrantte

Indian political binkers, and not only those having religious or philosophical speculation as their main field, have always accepted philosophy as the treu science guiding all other sciences. A truly political thinker like Kautilya regards philosophy (amishakh) as the lamp to all kinds of knowledge, the mean to accomplish all kinds of acts and the support of all the duties.

Brahmandya has always been considered as the basis of all sciences. It is, therefore, natural that all other studies should look to it for inspiration and support it is the master science guiding other sciences, without which they tend in become empty and foolish a

Sukrautit, like other significant works on polity, also reflects owne of the base philosophical concepts as it discussion on various superior of polity. One of the remarkably original idea of 5 sukra as a political thinker should accusally be ascribed to his faith in the base concepts acceptable to all the branches of philosophy except, of course that of Carvidas system. The theory of Karma and rebuth forms the central case of all these systems of Indian philosophy acts whether they owe their origin to vedu or to other authorities. All the branches of Hindu philosophy as well as that of Buddhusts and Jians have complete faith in the theory of rebitth base principle 8 It is remarkable that no political this thinds on that the author of Sukraviti and it made any aigmin and use of this theory. Sukra with the substitution of an all principles of an all principles of the substitution of the substi

is the lord of this earth because of his deeds in the botth as well as of penances, it is again said that the which is superior in every way to again said that the fluit not of little susterities. The kingship there are the different driving farce nor an agreement with the subjunction of second deeds in previous birth. This said one's good deeds in previous birth. This said ones in kely to be naturally degraded in the ladder spiritual ascent. Sukra expresses his faith in the dedicting of the ladder in connexion with non-political matters as well. He efforcing the desired of the said of the ladder of the ladder

(i.e. comes from previous birth) is really man's own wo But his simultaneous faith in rebirth makes him sometime a fatalist as be considers vices and virtues of this life a res of the deeds of previous birth? and declares that even smi exertions achieve good results when the Fate is favourable otherwise, the great efforts fail to produce any good | Ever then one is advised to know from tastra what is good and what is evil and to follow the good . Sukra's classification of kings in three categories i.e. saivika, rajasika and tamsika, also bears the influence of the concept of trigunātmaka praketi (three attributes of nature) as developed in sāmkhya system of philosophy. sattia signifies purity and refinement, rajas, activity and tamas stolidoess. Sankhya holds that not only physical reality but every thing that emerges from H m simularly constituted to Kingship, being a part of the same, is also constituted on the same line and Sukra, therefore, classifies the kings according to the predominence of the one of the three was have it when the of classification of kines as and of day the realm of Hinda

Impact of Hindu Theology

Sukra's discussion of nitifastra shows a remarkable impact of Hindu theology upon his thinking-although his state in not a theocratic one. It is to be noted that one of the eight main functions of the king, according to Sukra, is the performance of ralastiya and similar sacrifices12 which form one of the basic parts of Hindu theology. The king, moreover, is supposed to possess attributes of different deities as destribed in Hindu dharmafastras Indra is protector of all, vayu is spreader of scents, the sun, a despetter of darkness and creator of light, yama, the punisher, Agni, the purifier and enjoyer of all gifts; varues the sustainer of all things, Moon, a source of pleasure and kuvera, the god of wealth; the king of Sukra, like that of Manu and others, is supposed . to be made out of the permanent elements of these gods.18 This idea plus that of sacrificial duties of the king begin to gain prominence from the Vedic Times,16 The king Trassdasyu exlaims, 'I am Indra, I am Varuna', ... and on me (the gods) bestow those principal energies (that are) charact-, eristics of asuras 18 The idea is further developed in the other scriptures!s and is borrowed by Sukra also.

An unrighteous king, who is not a protector is liable to be ruined and east down by gods. Sukra asserts that transacket type of king m a part of the demons and goes to hell ¹³ The ideas of hell and punshment by the gods, repeated again and again in lukranit, are most popular elements of Hindu theology. Sukra sho makes a rich mention of the mythology. Sukra sho makes a rich mention of the mythology. Sukra sho makes a rich mention of the mythology. Six figure such as rawan, Yudhishtens, Sita, Bali, Durodhans, Janmejaya. Aila, Batapi, Paulastya and others as C. Examples to prove his these.

. Hindu Sociology and Polity of Sukra

The political thinking of the author of takeranti m highly influenced by the sociological speculation of the Hindux Hindu sociology divides the society in four hierarchical varias—brithman, kintriyu, vatiyu and zidea and saygos different duties to each of them called their swedharma Sukra, accepting this principle, assigns the duty of making people follow their respective smadharma to the state. Practising one's own duty, according to Sukra, is the highest penance and the king is advised to make the subjects acquire the habits of performing their duties by the use of his terrible scentre.18

The considerations of varna and caste also acquire much significance in the recruitment policy. Sukra sometimes adopts a liberal attitude for deserving persons of the varnas and castes other than the specified ones for various sadra, whatever his qualifications might be, would be appointed to a higher post 10 kinds of administrative, judicial and military jobs but no Sukra not only favours higher varnas but does not permit also of the socio-economic advancement of the sidras He lays down the rule not only for recruttment of the sadras but for their wages also and proposes to pay them as minimum as required only for their bare necessities with the declaration that the wealth that is stolen by the brahmana leads to good life hereafter and the wealth that is given in the fudra leads only to hell * Thus the politico-economic thinking of the author or fukrantit is also coloured by the sociological prejudices of the Hindus He, though theoretically agrees to the principle, as suggested by some scholars23 that vittue and past merit, and not the birth, are the key to the origin of the class division but birth in a higher class is also a result of the good deeds of previous life according to the Hindu sociology and Sukra fully subscribes to this view by expressing his faith in the principle of karma and theory of rebirth.

A remarkable sociological concept of the validity of popular social customs of various communities II also duly respected by Sukra. The king is advised to perform his duty by carefully studying the customs that are followed in countries and that are mentioned in fastras as well as those that are practised by castes, villages, corporations, and families. Some examples of such customs are also cited 22 It II emphatically declared that an action which is religious but disapproved by the people does not lead to heaven.21

Tradition of political thought and Sukra's polity The study attempted in the preceding chapters should supply ample evidence to prove that jukranitizara occupies a significant place in the gallery of the political treatises of the Hindus. The political thinking of the author of jukrantti fits well in the broader scheme of Hindu polity The principal ideas regarding origin of State, duties and functions of the king and his divinity, saptanga theory, administrative scheme, army administration, judicial procedure, taxation as well as manfal theory and the four-fold policy including 'six attributes' are more or less borrowed from or developed on the basis of the earlier concepts propounded by Kautilya, Bhishma, Manu and others The author of Jukrantii himself declares that he has prepared this treatise on the basis of the constructions of Manu and others # Bhishma, Kautilya, Narada and Kamandaka are slithough not quoted, their influence upon tukrantti is proved beyond any doubt. Sukramil has freely borrowed from all these sources and sometimes the passages are quoted without reference. The passages describing divine attributes of the king are alteration of the wellknown verses of Manu, the idea of the right of people to expell the unrighteous king and the notion about the influence of the king upon the time-spirit (Zeit-glest) remind one of the Bhishma's teachings. The idea of king's authority being a result of his past deeds is influenced by Narada's doctrine that king's authority is derived from his own karma 26 The saptanga theory is basically Kautilya's thesis followed by almost all the political thinkers of posterity. A similarity between some of Sukra's verses and those of Manu and Kamandaka are well-proved by scholars 26 This in not, however, suggested that Sukra lacks any originality and independent approach. He has borrowed or altered mostly those passeges of earlier writers which contain some basic principles of Indian polity There was no use of boasting of originality or not accepting the principles with which the author broadly agreed. Sukrantti therefore, has been rightly called a treatise of Arthatastra-Smrti tradition 27

But Sukra, nevertheless, exhibits freshness and originality of outlook more than any other thinkers except Kautilya, ifffifmu and ffanu. Elis doctrine of the batis of king's Authority classification of kines based on senting system of philosophy fresh arguments about hirr's influence upon time spirit description of the nomenclature and functions of the members of Council of Ministers principles of budgeting of state a revenue and expenditure, account of the grades and income of different feudatories, protocol of the royal court. ets supply more than sufficient evidence to prove his originality and independent approach But all these ideas are in tune with the wider spirit of ffindu polity Sukrartilista. therefore is rightly distinguished from all other late works on the subject by its vergenality and independence of thought The problem of individual liberty reesus state authority does play on extraordinarily effective role in the present day polity. But Sukra and other Hindu thinkers do not perceive the

on a number of important points 24

Civil Liberty and the State problem in the fathien modern ones do Sukes has not discussed the rights or liberties of individual but it does not mean that he is in favour of the oppression of individual iberty. The Hindus, it is strange, never criphasized the right findividual in socio-political affairs whereas the ultimate im of life-the last of the proustantar towards which all he activities are directed-metes or sali ation is entirely an ndividual attainment. The undividual prieft frees, therefore, the realm of spiritual progress to follow the path according his nature and expants but in sexual practice his rights re merged with those of society Sukra therefore does not iscuss the problem of individual's richt permit the state's or ing's authority azilat a tyrannical kong is ascribed to the community under the leadership of the purphina?—a guardian of social law—whereas the individual if he feels oppressed, is premight to leave the kingdoma. The underlying principle here in both the cases reveals that king a subnority is band as his nitateounests—his protection of the people and punishment to the wicked—fashing which he is not authorized to claim the loyalty and obedence of the subjects. As a single man could not successfully results a king's oppressive policies the former is given the choice to desert the latter. But in case the oppression increases and the community is organized, their action of depositioning the unrighteous king is fully approved by Sukra.

Besides, the king is always warned by Sukra not ill set sifully. He is advised not to invite the wrath of gods as well as that of people. The acceptance of the vasidity of tocial custems and practices also tends to support the principle that the envil rights of the community should be respected by the state.

Sukra's attitude towards Morality

It has been pointed out that Sukra adopts a doublefaced attitude towards morality, he asserts on king"s replacement and observes only as an abstract principle of government and observes that a rightness king us a part of the gods and the sindful one is that of the domons whereas an concrete policies of government and especially in the sphere of interistic relations his attitude towards moral behaviour is altogether reversed It is, therefore sated that Sukra, while upholding the supramacy of ethics over politics as a general principle, helped in practice to perpetuate the long standing orthologistics of a more of less commiscie droves of the one from the other. It

This estimate of Sukra's attitude towards morality appears to do some injustice to him. There is no doubt that Sukra Spirotes of all means to be adopted in war and entity; he appears to inculcate the principle of king's universal district and allow the king to confiscate the property of his tubjects (thus implying the principle that the necessity of the state knows, no law, But one should not overlook the circ.

nistances on the basis of which Sukra advises the policy to e followed by the king Sukra adopts the means other than oral ones only against the enemy as he knows that the tter m not bound to behave morally. He never allows the olicy of partition and punishment to be applied to not only te's own subjects but friends as well alliances and gifts e to be adopted towards friends, never the policies of playing one against another and punishment, and again he says th the assertion that one should never rule his own subjects the policies of separation or punishment but by those of ace and gifts 12 This implies that Sukra is in favour of poting bheds atte which could be said most immoral only tenst the enemy who is a regular cause of danger to his n existence Similarly he advises the king to confiscate property of the rich men only in the times of grave crisis hits promise that the same would be returned to them due interest when the crisis is over. " This should in no be called immoral. And so far as the universal distrust he king is concerned it only warns the king against the its and immoral persons and definitely does not provoke to be immoral in his own behaviour It should however, orne in mind that Sukra as an advisor to the king could automatically undo the compulsions of politics by presgalone to required to suggest the means to suppress the entity all ast damper, from other immoral aggressions upon the and the state. He appears to attempt a synthesis of the sixte and pragmatis, policies as far as possible. He however advises the large to adopt any uneighborus means received an infection of the large to adopt any time to the large to the formulation of the large of the immorality of the large five minist to call it so, is sprinkful by the advancement of the state similar faction of the people and punishment to the waked.

ral Remerks

tech of fakrante chai neverals that Handu political than port that never and time for appared as not a spatial certals of the crimking. The ereal of the fakrantists that that 4 m p² to it wonly to the political genus of

The # fer in Saltanie sara the Hindus. It is a pleasant surprise to note that when the Indian politics was fallen to pieces before the invaders there appears a political thinker so fresh and original in his outlook and not deviating also from the rich tradition of nitilasira Sukrantti, morcover, is not a book of theoretical discussion only; it supplies significant information and guidelines to be followed by any king having a desire to rule with success as well as meaningfulness. The mutual obligations of the kings and their subjects, the qualifications and functions of ministers as well as other officials, the matters of public finance, judicial administration, military system with an account of the weapons and art of war and interstate relations-almost all the aspects of state affairs are studied with keen analysis and a high sense of reality and righteousness The village administration, no doubt, is not discussed in detail. We do not find a mention of the republics perhaps because of their disappearance from the political scene when the treatise was composed. Some interpolations -difficult to be pointed out-are also admitted Notwithstanding such shortcomings, the claim of the author of fukranilisara made in the last verses of the fourth chapter of the usefulness of the study of the same for the rulers (though admittedly boastful in saying that in the three worlds there is no other nits like that of Sukra and others are worthless) in order to become competent to bear the burden of state affairs does not deserve to be brushed aside

General References

- 1 Artheterra, 1 3
- ? Raffighter anna, C. Indian Philosophy, bot, Ip 21.
- 1 Hargapia, 5 % , The Cultural Heritage of India Vol III, p. 9
- 4 Satisages, 123
- 5 Salvary, 1 121
- 6. Salemert, 2 37. 7. Satranti, 1 49-45.
- 8. Salemett, 1 37-51.
- 9. Salvantit. 1 59 10. Hirayanna St., The Cultural Stantage of India, Vol. III, p 42.
- 11. Salvartit, 1.24-35
- 12. Sutrantit. 1 123 24 13. Salvanget, 1 71-76.
- 14. Apte, V M . The Vedic Age, # 430-31.
- 15. Rigyeda, IV. 42.
- 16. Acharya, N. K., The Cultural Polity of the Hindus, # 73-74
- 17. Suk-antri, 1.36 and 120
- Il Subranget, 1 24-25.
- 19. Sukraneri, 4 5 14 20. Sukrantti, 2 4 404-6.
- 21. Ghosal, U. N. A History of Indian Political Ideas, # 498
- 22. Sukrantii, 4 5 45-30
- II Subrangil, $ 65 24. Sukrantil, 47,426
- 25. Ghosal, U N in The Struggle for Empire, p. 271-72.
- 26. Ghosat, U. N. A Bistory of India Political Ideas p. 495,517
- 27. Ghosal, U. N. A History of India Political Ideas p. 506
- 28 Ghosal, U. H. A History of India Political Ideas p. 495
- 29. Sukrantti, 2 275-76
- 30. Sukrantii, 3 47.
- 31. Ghossi, U N . A History of India Political Ideas, p 516.
- 32. Sukrantil, 4 1 39-42.
- 33 Sukrantti, 4 2 10-11

Bibliography

Original Sources

Agni Purana, H Tr. Gita Press, Gorakhpur

Atharvareda, M. Bloomfield, SBE Series, Motilal Banarasidas

Amarakoja, Ed. H.D. Sharma and N. G. Sardesas, Poona, 1941
Kamandakiya Nitusara, Ed. T. Ganapats Sastrs, Trivandram, 1912 Venkateswara, Press, Bombay, V 9 2009.

Kautilya's Arthatastra, Eng. Tr. R. Shamasastri, Mysore, 1951 Kumarsambhavam of Kalidasa, Sahitya Akademy New Delhi Markandeya Purana, Bd. K.M. Banerjee, Calcutta, 1962

Manu Smrtl, With Hindi Commentry by pt Hargovinda Sastri, Chaukhamba, Varanasi, 1952

Law of Manu (ir. G. Buhler) SBE Series, Vol. 25, Motilal Banarasidas, 1964 Narada Smrti, Tr. in Minor Law Books (J. Jolly), SBE Series, Vol. 33, Motilal Banarasidas, 1977.

Nitimoyakha of Nilakaniha Bhatta Gujarati Printing Press,

1921. Mahabharata, H Tr 6 Vols., Gita Press, Gorakhpur.

Panchatantra, Ed S.P. Pandey, Banaras, V.S. 1935 Rafatarangni of Kalhana Eng. tr. S.P. Stein, London, 1900 Rajaniti—Rainakara of Chandeswara, Bihar and Orissa

Research Society, Patna, 1936.
Ramayana of Valmiki, With Hindi tr. Gita Press, Gorakhpur

Ed. and tr. (Hindi) Pt Brahmasankar Misra, Chaukhambha Varanasi, 1963 (followed in this study)

Eng. tr. II K. Sarkar, second edition, Delhi, 1975 [followed in this study]

Samkhya Karıka. Eng. tr. H.T. Colchrooks, Bombay. 1924 Skandapurana, Gita Press, Gorakhpur Visunu Purana Gita Press, Gorakapur

Vishnu Smett Institutes of Vishnu (J. Jolly) SBE series, Vol. 7. Motilal Banarasidas, 1970 Yaindvalk va Smetti Chaukhambha, Banaras, 1968

Yuktikalpataru of Bhoia, Ed Iswar Chandra Sastri, Calcutta. 1917 Modern Works on Hindu Polity

Asyangar, K I'R Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity, Madras University, 1935.

Altekar, AS. State & Government in Ancient India, Motilal Banaras das, Varanasi, 1977

Bandopadhyaya N.C. Development Hindu Polity & Political Theories, 2 parts, Calcutta, 1927-38. Banerjee, P.N. International Law & Customs in Ancient

India Calcutta, 1920. Bhandarkar, DR. Some Aspects of Ancient Indian Polity,

Dacca University, 1941 Chakravarti PC. The Art of War in Ancient India, Daces University, 1941

Chatterjea Hiealul, International Law and Inter-State Relations in Ancient India, Calcutta, 1958

Date, G.T., The Art of War in Ancient India, 1929 Dikshitar FRR Hindu Administrative Institutions, Madras

University, 1929 War in Ancient India Macmillan 1944 Gharhal U.N. A History of Indian Political Ideas, Oxford

1966 Contributions to the History of Hindu Revenue System, Calintta University, 1927. Japanawal K.P., Hindu Polity (Hinds ed.), 2 Vols., Kan

Nagari Pracharini Sabba, V.S. 2012 Kine, P. P. History of Dharmasastras, Vol. III, (11, ed. III.)

Lucinow 1945 Law, N. N., Aspects of Ancient Ind an Polity, Oxford, 1921

Inter-State Pelations in Amiren Icdia, Callutta 1971 Statumder, & & The Military System in Ancient Cat. str4. 1944

Majumdar, R. C., Corporate Life in Ancient India, Calcutta, 1918
Mookerjea, R. K., Local Government in Ancient India,

Oxford, 1920.

Panikar, R. M., Ideas of Sovereignty and State in Indian Political Thought, Bombay, 1963
Prasad, Benl, The Theory of Government in August India.

Allahabad, 1927. The State in Ancient India, Allahabad, 1928

Sarkar, B. K., Pofitical Institutions and Theories of the Hindus, Calcutta, 1939.

Sharma, R. S., Aspects of Political Ideas and Institutions in Ancient India, Motifal Banarasidas, 1968.

Sastri, J. LAL, Political Thought in the Puranas, Lahore, 1944.

Sinha, B P., Readings in Kautilya's Arthasastra, Delhi, 1976.

Sinha, H. N., Sovereignty in Ancient Indian Polity, London, 1936, Verma, V. P., Studies in Hindu Political Thought and Its Verma, V. P., Studies in Hindu Political Thought and Its Metaphysical Foundations, Motifal Banarasidas, 1975.

Indian History

Agrawal, V. S., Harshacharita . Ek Sanskritik Adhyayan, Patana, 1953

Basham, A L , Wonder That was India.

Bhandarakar, D. R., Ashoka, Calcutta, 1932.

Bhattacharya, H., The Cultural Heritage of India Vols. II and III, Ramkrishna Mission Institute, Calcutta, 1969.

Kane, P. V. History of Dharmanastras 3 Vols. Hindi edition.

Kane, P. V., History of Dharmasastras 3 Vots. Hindi edition, Lucknow, 1965.
Keith, A. B., History of Sanskrit Literature, Oxford, 1953.

Law, N. N., Studies in Indian History and Culture, London, 1925 Majumdar, R. C., Vedic Age (edited).

Majumdar, R. C., Vedic Age (edited).

Age of Imperial Unity (edited).

Age of Imperial Unity (edited). Classical Age (edited)

Age of Imperial Kanauj. (edited). Struggle for Empire (edited). Delhi Sultanate (edited), -Bhartiya Vidva Bhawan, Bombay,

An Advanced History of India (edited with Datia and Raychaudhuri), Macmillan London, 1963. Metraux, and Crouget, Studies in the Cultural History of

India, (UNESCO), 1965

Mookerrjee, R. K., Asoka, London, 1928
Chandragupta Maurya and His Times, Madras, 1943
Hindu Civilization, London, 1936

Harsha, Oxford, 1926

Raychaudhuri, H C. Political History of Ancient India, Calcutta, 1950

Sastri, K. A. N., Age of the Nandas and Mauryas, Mothal Banarasidas, 1952.

Srivastava, A. L. The Sultanate of Delhi, Shivalal Agrawal, Agra. 1953.

Tripathi, R S., History of Kanauj, Banaras, 1937.

Valdya, C V., History of Medieval Hindu India, 3 Vols., Pagna, 1921-26.

General Works
Appadoral, A., The Substance of Politics, Oxford University

Press, 1978.

Ashirvadam, A. D., Political Theory 2 Vols (Hindi Edition)
Lucknow, 1961.

Avasthi & Malieshwari, Public Administration, Agra, 1962
Dias, R. W. M., Jurispfudence, London, 1970.

Friedmann, W., Legal Theory, London, 1967.
Garner, J. W., Political Science and Government, Calcutta, edition, 1951.

Sunta. R. S., And M. Radhaswams. Advanced Accountancy.

Gupta, R. S., And M Radhaswams, Advanced Accountancy, S. Chand & Sons, 1981.

Goodnow, F. J., Principles of Constitutional Government, Harpers, 1916

Hicks, Ursula K., Public Finance, Cambridge, 1961

Sundharam, Andley, rubic Lubounts & rubic Finance, Delhi, 1981. Warner, Richard A , The Principles of Public Administration, London, 1947.

White, L. D , The Civil Service in the Modern State, Univeraity of Chicago Press, 1930

Introduction to the Study of Public Administration, Macmillan, 1939.

Willowghby, W. F. Principles of Public Administration, Brookings Institution, 1939

Principles of Judicial Administration, Brookings Institution, 1939.

Journals

-Annals of Bhandarkar Ociental Institute Poona

- -Bulletin of the School of Oriental & African Studies, London
- -Indian Historical Quarterly, Calcutta. -Indian Journal of Public Administration, Delbi.
- -Journal of Andhra Historical Society, Rajahmundry
 - -Journal of Bibar & Ocissa Research Society, Patana -Journal of Ganganatha Jha Research Institute,
 - Allahabad. -Journal of Indian History, Trivaudram
 - -Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta.
 - -Nagari Pracharin: Patrika, Banaras.

Dictionaries

- -A Sanskrit-English Dictionary
- -Monier Williams, Oxford, 1951
- -The Students Sanskrit-English Dictionary. -The Students English-Sanskrit Dictionary.
- V.S. Apte, Mottlal Banarasidas, Varanası, 1970,
 - -The Hindi-English Dictionary, -Hardeo Bahrı, Raipal & Sons, Delhi, 1981.

